PREFACE

SRI AUROBINDO LIBRARY PONDICHERRY (India)

We are happy to place before the indologists the Kalpalatāviveka, a hither to unpublished work on Sanskrit poetics. This Viveka is a super-commentary on the Pallava which is a commentary on the Kalpalatā. Though the author of the Kalpalatā and the Pallava is certainly Ambāprasāda — the chief minister of Siddharāja Jaisiṁha (1094-1143 A.D.) of Patan, we are not in a position to say definitely as to who composed the Viveka. It is really a misfortune that the first two works are lost to us.

The scope of the Viveka is made clear by its author in the opening verse. Therein he declares that he would explain whatever is passed over by the author of the Pallava. In spite of this self-imposed limitation he has widened its scope by incorporating in the Viveka detailed discussions on the various topics on Poetics like Dhvani, Prastāra, Bhāvas, and so on.

We are very grateful to Munirāja Puṇyavijayaji who handed over to us the necessary materials for the preparation of this critical edition. The editors have used, in the preparation of this critical edition, three mss. the description of which is given below.

क : This palmleaf ms. belongs to Jesalmer Bhandara. It is in two parts. First part contains 249 folios. Therein we find first two complete chapters and some portion of the third chapter. And the second part contains 148 folios. Therein we find the remaining portion of the text. The ms. belongs to the first half of the 13th Cent. V. S. Size : 16'' × $2\frac{1}{4}$''. Condition : best. It is listed in the Catalogue prepared by Muni Shri Puṇyavijayaji (p. 134; No. 316). The Catalogue is unpublished.

ख : This is also a plam-leaf ms. preserved in Jesalmer Bhandara. It contains 389 folios. Extent : 6500 Ślokas. Age of the ms. : 1205 V. S. Size : $25\frac{1}{4}$'' × $2\frac{1}{2}$'' Last folio is illustrated. Condition : best. In the above mentioned Catalogue it is listed on page 134 (No. 317).

ग, सं : These two signs refer to one and the same palm-leaf ms. preserved in Sanghavipada Bhandara, Patan. It contains 325 folios. Size : $16\frac{1}{4}$'' × $2\frac{1}{2}$''. 55 folios are missing. Age of the ms. c. first half of the 13th Cent. V. S.

सं सं : This means the corrections made in सं ms. by some one in olden days.

We thank Shri Murari Lal Nagar and Shri Harishankar Shastry for preparing this critical edition of the Viveka. We record our sincere thanks to Prof. P. R Vora who have written for this edition a learned introduction.

I must also gratefully acknowledge the financial assistance given by the Ministry of Education, Government of India (under the scheme of the publication of rare mss.) for the publication of this important work.

We hope that the scholars of Sanskrit Poetics will find this work interesting and useful.

INTRODUCTION

Those who are familiar with the history of Sanskrit literature would not be surprised to meet with Sanskrit literary works which are annoyingly reticent about their authors, or with works whose dates have provided subject for perennial, nay endless, controversy. In such cases, the inquisitive reader is left to the clues available from the corpus of the work concerned and to external evidence whenever available. Kalpalatā-viveka, the present work, is by no means an exception to this. It does not allow us the privilege to know the name of its author. However we are able to fix its date with a reasonable degree of certainty with the help of internal evidence supplied by the work and its earliest available manuscript and of external evidence afforded by various other sources.

Another and perhaps greater difficulty with the present work Viveka is that it is not by itself an original work but a sub-commentary on such a work, the latter and its first commentary, not being available, if not irretrievably lost. We know from Viveka that the name of the original work on which it is a sub-commentary is Kalpalatā and that there was a commentary — an auto-commentary as we shall see afterwards — on the latter called Kalpapallava or merely Pallava[1]. We do not get any information whatever regarding the authorship of these two works from the present work, Viveka.

Authorship of Kalpalatā :

Viveka does not furnish any information about the author of Kalpalatā. It does not even tell us about its own author, in case the two do not have a common author. Fortunately we get a reference to the name of the author of the Kalpalatā and Pallava in the Syādvādaratnākara and we can gather some information about him from the following sources :

(i) Syādvādaratnākara : This is an auto-commentary by the Jain dialectician Vādī Devasūri on his treatise on Jain Logic, Pramāṇa-naya-tattvāloka. Devasūri refers in this commentary to a work named Kalpalatā and its commentary (Saṁketa) Pallava.[1] They are attributed to one Ambāprasāda-saciva-pravara.

कल्पपल्लवमात्रेण न ये कल्पलतां विदुः ।
कल्पपल्लवशेषोऽयं क्रियते तद्विदेऽपरः ॥ (ibid P. 320)

This reference occurs in the S. R. on the second sūtra of P. N. T. wherein the definition of Pramāṇa is given. In order to clarify his discussion regarding the case-endings and the respective order of the subject and the predicate in a definition Devasūri quotes several illustrations, some of which are found in Kāvyprakāśa as well as Kalpalatā-viveka. He quotes, inter alia, the following verse:

> sūryā-candramasau yatra > citraṁ khadyotapotakau । > nityodayajuṣe tasmai
> parasamai jyotiṣe namaḥ ॥

The vṛtti following these illustrations runs thus: yathā cāmīṣām aṁśānām anuvādyatvaṁ pūrvatra ca tad tad aṁśānāṁ vidheyatvaṁ tathā srīmad-Ambāprasāda-saciva-pravareṇa Kalpalatāyāṁ tatsaṁkete Kalpa-pallave ca prapañcitam astīti tata evāvaseyam.[2] From these comments we learn that Śrīmad Ambāprasāda had already discussed in his Kalpalatā and its gloss Pallava as to what were the respective subjects and predicates in these illustrations.

This very verse is discussed from the same stand-point at the inception of Viveka[3]. This is the benedictory verse of Kalpalatā. According to Viveka if the first half of the verse were, "Khadyota-potakau yatra sūryācandramasāvapi" (instead of sūryācandramasau yatra citraṁ khadyota-potakau),[4] the stanza would involve what is called Avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa-doṣa; that is to say, if the order of the subject and the predicate here were changed that doṣa would arise. "This", remarks Viveka, "would be discussed at length in Kalpalatā under the figure Metaphor (Rūpaka) and in Kalpapallava under Avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁsa-doṣa".[5]

The above reference is so clear and unmistakable that we may without hesitation infer therefrom that Kalpalatā and its gloss Kalpapallava are the same as those mentioned in our present work, Viveka, which is a sub-commentary on Kalpalatā and a supplement to its gloss Pallava.

On the strength of the same source we can say that the name of the author of Kalpalatā and Kalpapallava was Ambāprasāda. The suffix 'sacivapravara' obviously is a title suggesting the designation of this Ambāprasāda and indicates that he was the chief (pravara) minister (saciva) of some king, i. e. to say of Siddharāja Jayasiṁha, as we shall presently see.

(ii) Prabhāvakacarita : In this work by Prabhācandra-ācārya, a minister (mantrī) Ambaprasāda[1] or Ambāprasāda[2] is mentioned in Chapter XXI, which relates the story of Vādi Devasūri. Ambāprasāda was climbing up the Mount Ābu as a member of the sūri's party. He was bitten by a serpent (dandaśūka). When Devasūri came to know of this misfortune, he sent to the minister his pādodaka (water with which his feet were washed). When the wound was dressed with that water Ambāprasāda was completely cured of the poison[3].

The same work further tells us : Once a follower of the Bhāgavata sect (Bhāgavaddarśani) named Devabodha came to Patan, and hung on the royal gate a paper holding out a challenge, to anyone who took it up, in the form of a very difficult riddle, which remained unsolved for six months. In the meantime, Ambāprasāda introduced Devasūri to the King Siddharāja He solved the riddle and defeated the overbearing challenger.[4]

From the above we may reasonably conclude that the minister Ambāprasāda referred to in S. R. as the author of Kalpalatā and its gloss, is the same as the one who is mentioned in the fore-going passages from Prabhāvakacarita.

(iii) Gāḷā Inscription[5] : This is an inscription dated c. 1137 A.D., found near Dhrangadhra in Kathiawar. In this inscription Ambāprasāda is mentioned as the chief minister (mahā-amātya) in charge of the royal exchequer.[6] The inscription belongs to the reign of Siddharāja Jaisiṁha (1094 to 1143 A. D.) of Patan[7].

It is evident from the above that Ambāprasāda, was the author of Kalpalatā and its gloss and that he was a minister of Siddharāja. We get but scanty information about his life. Probably he was a Jain[1], for he is mentioned in Prabhāvakacarita, as going to Mount Abu as a member of Devasūri's party. He is called a minister in that work, not a chief minister. Devasūri returned from Abu about 1122 A.D.[2], therefore Ambāprasāda who introduced him to the royal court was a minister in 1122 A. D. In S. R. and Gāḷā inscription (c. 1137 A. D.)[3] he is referred to as the chief minister. According to epigraphical evidences Dādāka was the chief minister in c. 1139 A. D.[4]

The Prakrit work Puṣpāvatī was copied in 1135 A.D., when Gāṅgila was the chief minister.[5] If we accept that there was only one chief minister (mahāmātya) we may say that Ambāprasāda enjoyed this important position for a couple of years.[6] The mere mention of Ambāprasāda in S. R. by Devasūri does not justify a conclusion that he was himself a philosopher[7] The author was a contemporary of the great Hemacandra-ācārya. He was undoubtedly influenced by that luminary and borrows copiously from his Kāvyānuśāsana. It must have been quite a privilege for Ambāprasāda to discuss these subjects with the Ācārya. Their junior contemporary was Māṇikyacandra, who also borrows a lot from Hemacandra in his Kāvyaprakāśa-saṁketa. It appears that

[1] The late Shri D. K. Śāstri remarks that the names of Jain ministers only are available in Jain Prabandhas [Gujaratano Madhyakālīna Rājaput Itihāsa (P. 309)] If we accept this statement we have directly to conclude that Ambāprasāda who is mentioned in P. C. is a Jain. But even otherwise there are several reasons which bear out such a surmise.

[2] Devasūri's guru Municandrasūri died in c. 1122 A. D. (vide Introduction to H. K. S. (P. 259) — on P. 251 of the work it is stated that Devasūri's guru died in c. 1115 A. D., which appears to be a misprint). Devasūri had returned to Patan a few months before his guru's death, and was introduced to Siddharāja about that time.

[3] This means that probably S. R. was written about 1137 A. D. That is, to say, if we think with Shri Śāstrī that there was only one post of the chief minister during the reign of Sīddharāja (G. M. R. I.-P. 308). It is possible that there were several chief ministers connected with different departments as is suggested by the Gālā inscription. Yet the conclusion regarding the composition of S. R. seems to be unobjectionable.

[4] G. M. R. I. (P. 266) vide Intro. H. K. S. (P. 193) for a contrary opinion.

[5] G. M. R. I. (P. 309) and History of Jain Literature (P. 252).

[6] G. M. R. I. (P. 308) For a contrary opinion vide Intro. to H. K. S. (P. 193), where Shri R. C. Parikh suggests that there were several chief ministers, in Siddharāja's time, which appears more probable.

[7] Vide Intro. to H. K. S. (P. 250). This conjecture was made when the nature of Kalpalatā was not known. Now that we know that Kalpalatā is a work on Poetics we can say that Ambāprasāda was well versed in Poetics, though we do not know whether he was a philosopher also, for Poetics and Philosophy are not at all antagonistic, Dharmakīrti, Ānandavardhana, Abhinavagupta, Hemacandra and many others prove this.

Sai 70-012

Ambāprasāda had at his disposal the rich library of Ācārya Hemacandra, which contained several works which we now know merely by name. He had thoroughly studied the subject on which he has tried to write a sycretism, which bespeaks his critical aptitude. So long as the original is not recovered it would not be possible to give any opinion regarding the value of the opinions he expressed there.

Before we discuss the date of Kalpalatā and Viveka it would not be out of place to dispose of a few incidental questions. It may be asked whether the text quoted above from Syādvādaratnākara refers to only two works viz. Kalpalatā and Pallava, or to three viz. Kalpalatā, its gloss (tatsaṁketa), and Pallava. It is possible philologically to interpret the words thus: 'Kalpalatāyām ca tatsaṁkete ca Kalpapallave ca', as referring to three works. But it would be quite unwarranted first, because Viveka does not refer to any such gloss as distinct from Pallava, and secondly, because the verse below the colophon of the present work states that Pallava was the only (mātra) commentary on Kalpalatā.[1] This statement is confirmed by the note[2] on this verse which categorically states that there was only one commentary (vivaraṇa) on Kalpalatā. It rules out the possibility of any other commentary than Pallava,

One may ask whether that text quoted from S. R. may suggest that both Kalpalatā and Pallava are written by Ambāprasada or that they have separate authors. There are several references in Viveka which apparently suggest that the authors of the two were distinct.

There are several references in Viveka to Sūtrakāra.[3] Once there is a reference to the Sūtrakāra[4] as distinct from a Vṛttikāra. Moreover, there are several references to Granthakāra.[5] At one place 'granthakāra' is distinguished from 'vayam'.[6] All these may go to indicate that the authors of Kalpalatā and Pallava were different persons. Though it is possible to account for some of these references, we are not at the present stage able to completely explain away these references, which may prima facie argue distinct authorship of these two works. Yet the reference in Syādvādratnākara does not seem to corroborate it. The particle 'ca' in "Ambāprasāda-sacivapravareṇa Kalpalatāyām tat saṁkete Kalpapallave ca", suggests samuccaya (aggregation), so 'Ambāprasāda-saciva-pravareṇa is to be construed with both 'Kalpalatāyām' and 'Kalpapallave', for it is the subject of the predicate 'prapañcitam asti' which comes at the end. It is better, therefore, to assume that Pallava is an auto-commentary by Ambāprasāda on his Kalpalatā.

In that case we have to account for the above mentioned references to Sūtrakāra and Grantha-kāra on the one hand, and to Vṛttikāra and 'Vayam' on the other. The Sūtrakāra and Vṛttikāra mentioned on P. 280, l. 21[1] probably refer to Rudraṭa and Namisādhu, his scholiast, who anticipates Rudraṭa in furnishing illustrations of some of the varieties of the figure Samuccaya[2]. Even at P. 280, l. 20 the definition of Samuccaya given by Rudraṭa[3] is discussed. It should, however, be confessed that the words 'tatra sādhu (Viveka P. 280, l. 23) do not occur in Namisādhu's Ṭippaṇa. It is possible that Viveka here quotes from some other earlier commentator on Rudraṭa's Kāvyalaṁkāra from whom perhaps Namisādhu borrowed !

'Granthakāra' at P. 247, l. 12[4] refers to Bhāmaha and the verse under discussion at that place is B. K. L. II 46. At P. 247, l. 11[5] also 'granthakāra' refers to Bhāmaha, the verses under discussion are his-Kāvyālaṅkāra II. 50 & 51.

Date of Kalpalatā :

We have seen that Ambāprāsada was a minister of Siddharāja (1094 to 1143 A. D.). He therefore flourished about the first half of the 12th century A. D., though he might have lived even there-after.

The earliest available ms. of Kalpalatā-viveka is dated 1148 A. D., Therefore, Kalpalatā was written earlier than that. This is borne out by the reference to Kalpalatā in Syādvādaratnākara which was probably written in 1137 A. D.[6] If so Kalpalatā was written somewhere about

6. We have seen earlier that S. R. refers to Ambāprasāda as a saciva-pravara. If we take it to indicate that he was the chief minister when S. R. was written, the latter must have been written about 1137 A. D., as Gāḷā inscription (1136 A. D.) refers to Ambāprasāda as mahāmātya. If the word sacivapravara merely means that Ambāprasada was a mere minister, it would mean that he wrote Kalpalatā even before he became the chief minister, that is to say before 1136 A. D..

1136 A. D., or a little earlier, but not far earlier than that. For from the text of Kalpalatāviveka we are able to decide that Kalpalatā and its Pallava borrow from Mammaṭa's Kāvyaprakāśa[1] and also from Hemacandra's Kāvyānuśāsana.

The name of the present work :

The name of the present work is Kalpalatā-viveka. It is also called Viveka, in the same way as Kalpa-pallava is called Pallava. One may ask whether the name of this work is Pallavaśeṣa or Kalpapallavaśeṣa, or whether it has two names viz Kalpalatā-viveka and Kalpapallava-śeṣa[2]. There is no doubt that the name of this work is Kalpalatā-viveka and not Kalpapallavaśeṣa, for the following reasons :

(i) In the colophon at the end of the work the author himself tells us that Kalpalatā-viveka is the name (abhidhāna) of his work.[3]

(ii) In the introductory stanza the author refers to it as Viveka[4] and not Pallava-śesa. Even in the text at several places the author refers to it as Viveka[5] and never as śeṣa or Pallava-śesa.

(iii) It is true that at the end of each chapter we get, "Kalpa-

[1] Kāvyaprakāśa is believed to have been written in the first half of the 12th century A. D., the lower limit being 1150 A. D. (vide Kane Hist. of Alaṁkāra literature P. CVI.) It is submitted here that it is better to consider that Kāvyaprakāśa was written latest by the beginning or the first decade of the 12th century A. D., for the following reasons :

(i) Ruyyaka wrote his Alaṁkāra-sarvasva between 1135 and 1150 A. D. (vide De : Hist. of SK. literature P. 194 and Kane: Hist. of Alaṁkāra literature P. CXI). He must have written his Saṁketa on Kāvyaprakāśa even earlier.

(ii) Kalpalatā-viveka mentions Kāvyaprakāśa by name, and Kalpalatā borrows copiously from the latter therefore Kāvyaprakāśa is earlier than 1136 A. D.

(iii) Hemacandra mentions Mammaṭa by name (vide H. K. S. V.–P. 157). This is the earliest mention of Mammaṭa, as Prof. Gode rightly points out [vide Studies in Indian Literary History Vol. I (P. 28)]. He even borrows, and borrows wholesale, from Kāvyaprakāśa. So Kāvyaprakāśa is earlier than Kāvyānuśāsana of Hemacandra. Kalpalatā, its Pallava and even Viveka, borrow from Hemacandra. In view of the earlier date of Kalpalatā–viveka and Kalpalatā, it is not possible to accept the date of the composition of Kāvyānuśāsana given earlier, [vide Kane : Hist. of Alaṁkāra literature P. CX; also Intro. to H. K. S. (R. C. Parikh) P. 328]. It is obvious that Kāvyānuśāsana was written earlier than 1136 A. D., and perhaps about 1130 A. D. at the latest. If so, it is possible to carry the lower limit of the composition of K. P. upwards back to the beginning or the first decade of the 12th century A. D.

pallavaśeṣe Kalpalatā-viveke etc."[1] But this does not prove anything in the face of the specification in the colophon at the end of this work, where it is clearly stated that Kalpalatā-viveka is its name. So 'Kalpapallavaśeṣe' is in apposition to the name 'Kalpalatā-viveke', just in the same way as in the phrase 'Akbar, the mughal emperor', Akbar is the name and 'the mughal emperor' its descriptive epithet, irrespective of their order.

(iv) The present work is a sub-commentary on Kalpalatā. It is natural that it should suggest, as Hemacandra's Viveka does, its relation to the original. The compound 'Kalpapallava-śeṣa' would rightly describe its nature suggesting that Viveka is to supplement Pallava.

Thus Kalpalatā-viveka is the name of the present work.

The non-mention of the name Viveka in the two verses[2] at the end of this work may seem to militate against the above conclusion. But in view of the colophon one has to confess that the mention of śeṣa or Kalpapallava-śeṣa there, does not prove anything to the contrary. They are used there to describe the secondary nature of the present work. Again in the second verse the word 'Viveka' does not suit the metre, though in the first we can have "Kalpalatā-viveko'yam", without impairing the metre, but then it would fail to describe the bearing of Viveka on the first commentary on Kalpalatā, which is essential looking to the tenor of that verse. Therefore these verses do not suggest anything contrary to our above conclusion.

Kalpalatā and Kalpalatā-viveka :

As seen above Viveka is a supplement to Pallava, hence it is described as Kalpapallavaśeṣa. The name Kalpalatā-viveka means 'a discerning gloss on Kalpalatā.' But this gloss, as we shall see, is not a second, independent and direct commentary on Kalpalatā but a sub-commentary, a supplement of the auto-commentary Pallava,[3] for the following reasons :

(i) The introductory stanza[4] in Viveka tells us that it is a gloss on those parts of Kalpalatā, which have not been elucidated in Pallava (yat pallave na vivṛtam), which thus stands midway between the original and Viveka.

(ii) The first[1] of the two verses at the end of the work clearly points out that this Kalpapallavaśeṣa i. e. supplement to Pallava, was composed for those who could not understand Kalpalatā with the help of Pallava alone (mātreṇa). In short Viveka is to be read with Pallava so that the latter may be more comprehensible.

(iii) The second verse[2] at the end of this work contains a metaphor. Here Kalpalatā is compared to a temple (vibudha-mandira), Pallava to the pitcher on the top of its dome and Viveka (rightly called śeṣa in this context) to the bannerstaff whereon the banner of Suggestion (dhvani) was unfurled (by the author of Viveka). Even if we do not unduly exploit this metaphor it would not be improper to draw from it the inference that it suggests the secondary nature of Viveka in its relation to Pallava also.

(iv) Kalpalatā and Pallava are written by the same author, it is natural, therefore, that Viveka should come after and through Pallava which is referred to by Devasūri along with Kalpalatā, whereas Viveka is not.

(v) Viveka forbears from dilating on topics which have been already elucidated and explained in Pallava, often with such remarks as: diṅmātraṁ cedam vistaratas tu Kalpapallava eva prapañcitāt (Viveka P. 9, l. 22). Thus it pre-supposes Pallava, thereby proving its own secondary relation to it.

As neither the original work, Kalpalatā nor its auto-commentary has been recovered, it is difficult to say whether Viveka actually comments on and explains the text of Pallava, yet it certainly comes after the latter and has no independent status in its relation to the original.

The Scope of Kalpalatā, Pallava and Viveka :

We have already seen that Kalpalatā is not recovered. Its exact scope, therefore, is a matter of conjecture. Even the title 'Kalpalatā' is not descriptive in nature and by itself it fails to suggest its subject much less its scope. It means 'the desire-yielding creeper' and nothing more. Here obviously it is used metaphorically. Such usages are by no means rare in Sanskrit literature.[3] But here it does not so much as hint at its subject in the absence of some other word like 'Kāvya'. Yet from the contents of Viveka, we can infer the scope of Kalpalatā.

[3] cf. काव्यकल्पलता, चित्रकल्पलता etc. where due to words like काव्य, चित्र etc. we can easily know subject matter of the works.

This work purports to deal with Sanskrit Poetics. It is divided into four chapters called sections (paricchedas). The first chapter deals with the blemishes (doṣas) of Poetry, the second with the excellences (guṇas) of Poetry, the third with the figures of sound (śabdālaṅkāras) and the last with the figures of sense (arthālaṅkāras). Thus it would appear that it leaves out certain controversial topics of the subject like, the definition of Poetry (Kāvya-lakṣaṇa), the purposes of Poetry (Kāvya-prayojana), the cause of Poetry (Kāvya-hetu), the types of Poetry (Kāvya-prakāra) and so on. Inspite of this, Kalpalatā seems to compress within its four chapters almost all the important topics of Alaṁkāra-śāstra and tries to furnish, as its name Kalpalatā suggests, all information and instruction about them.

Viveka almost offers an apology for the addition of this new work, Kalpalatā, to the already vast bulk of literature available on the subject. This reference helps us understand the scope and aim of Kalpalatā. There are several doṣas, guṇas and alaṁkāras which are same in name though they are essentially quite different; there are others which are given different names by different authorities on Poetics though they are essentially the same.[1] According to the above remarks from Viveka, Kalpalatā undertook to analyse them and ultimately to bring out a syncretic reconciliation of the different views regarding the doṣas, guṇas and alaṁkāras. It thus appears that the author of Kalpalatā took upon himself a very useful work of a highly critical nature. He has, in short, undertaken a survey of works on Poetics and opinions of writers on the subject right from Bharata down to Hemacandra and perhaps tried to evolve a synthesis therefrom.

Scope of Pallava: Kalpapallava or Pallava, as it is often called, is, as we have seen, an auto-commentary (svopajña-ṭīkā) on Kalpalatā. Its scope, therefore, must be essentially the same as that of the original work. But it explains[2] and elaborates[3] the latter. In this perhaps it is often terse, as Devasūri calls it a saṁketa[4]. It is true that inspite of this Kalpapallava did dilate on certain topics. Certain references[1] in the text of Viveka suggest that Pallava discussed, if occasionally, certain topics at length : for instance, it treated Grāmyadoṣa at considerable length. Yet the fact that a supplementary commentary was necessary indicates that on the whole Pallava must have been terse rather than copious.

Scope of Viveka : Viveka is secondary in nature. It is a sub-commentary on Kalpalatā and as its name suggests it is expected to be critical and discerning in its approach. It purports to supplement Pallava by elucidating and explaining all those topics which remained incomprehensible inspite of the latter. Thus its scope is conditioned on the one hand by the scope of the original which it seeks to critically explain, and on the other by its bid merely to supplement Pallava and not to reiterate anything that was discussed in the latter. We may perhaps say that Viveka has successfully achieved both these aims, first by explaining whatever was passed over by Pallava and secondly by restricting itself to that and consciously forbearing from making repetitions.[2]

In spite of such a self-imposed limitation Viveka has sought to widen its horizon by incorporating within itself detailed discussions on several topics of Poetics like Dhvani, Prastāra[3], Bhāvas, and so on. In doing so the author has not hesitated in bodily importing long passages from the works of Ānandavardhana[4], Bhaṭṭendurāja, Abhinavagupta[5], Mahimabhaṭṭa, Namisādhu and so on.[6]

Structural nature of Kalpalatā :

In the absence of the original Kalpalatā it is quite difficult, even

   We have tried, wherever possible, to trace the sources, which please see in the survey of the contents of Viveka.

impossible, to guess at its exact structure. We get the following data from Kalpalatā-viveka wherefrom an attempt may be made to reconstruct the original. But then it would be hazardous to make any definite conclusion with regard to it.

(i) We meet with several references to Kārikās in Viveka. They are as follows:

(b) (ibid) P. 2, l. 26.[2]

and (d) (ibid) P. 127, l. 19.[4]

These Kārikās are borrowed from the works of earlier writers. For instance, the first of the above references to Kārikās[5] is to Kāvyaprakāśa VII 11, the second and third to R. K. L. VI. 8 and 19 respectively and the last to Dhvanyāloka II. 3. Thus it may appear that Kalpalatā contained Kārikās original[6] as also culled from other works, just as Sarsvati-Kaṇṭhābharaṇa of Bhoja does.

(ii) The above conclusion is however to be reconciled with several references to Sūtras which we meet with in Viveka. They are as follows:

(a) Viveka P. 237, ll. 10, 11 and 14.[7]

(b) (ibid) P. 250, l. 12.[8]

The Sūtras too are not original but borrowed from the works of earlier writers. For instance, the first three of the above references are to Udbhaṭa's Karikā in Kāvyālaṁkārasaṁgraha[9] and the last to Vāmana's K. L. S.[10] Moreover at one place Rudraṭa is referred to not by name but as Sūtrakāra.[1]

In view of the accepted convention of writers on Sanskrit scientific works, it is not probable that Kalpalatā contained both the Sūtras and the Kārikās. It had either the one or the other. Therefore, the above references to the Sūtras have to be reconciled with those to the Kārikās. We have noted above that all except one of these references to sūtras are actually to Kārikās which have been called Sūtras on account of their sūtra-like brevity.[2] If the Sūtra from Vāmana is merely a quotation either in Kalpalatā or Pallava we may conclude that like Sarasvatīkaṇṭhābharaṇa, Kalpalatā contained Karikās some original and some culled from works of other writers.

We have reason to suspect that Kalpalatā contained much more than mere Karikās. There are several references which indicate that Kalpalatā contained, if brief, explanations, comments and discussions. The following remarks corroborate this surmise:

(a) "This thing will be elaborated (vitatya vakṣyate) in Kalpalatā (Viveka P. 1, l. 10).[3]

(b) "As the word 'Kṛtyā' has another meaning (arthāntara) which is inauspicious, it is not explained (vyākhyātaḥ) in Kalpalatā as a word evoking inauspicious sense." (ibid P. 10, l. 12)[4]

(c) "And this will be elaborated in the treatment of Sasandeha".[5] (ibid P 14, l. 14).

(d) "And this has been specified in view of the varieties and subvarieties in Kalpalatā as well as in Daṇḍī (ibid P. 189, l. 13)[6].

The above remarks obviously indicate that Kalpalatā contained explanations etc. which were necessarily terse.

These discussions were probably borrowed from Vṛttis on earlier works on Poetics[7] like Vāmana's vṛtti on K. L S, Ānandavardhana's Vṛtti on Dhvanikārikās, Indurāja's Laghuvṛtti on U. K. L. S., Abhinava's Locana, Bhoja's Vṛtti on S. K , Mammaṭa's Vṛtti on K. P. and Hemacandra's Alaṁkāracūḍāmaṇi.

(iii) There is a reference in Viveka which appears to suggest that over and above the Kārikās and their explanations, K*alpalatā* contained illustrations. Viveka remarks :

"And this will be illustrated (nidarśayiṣyate) in Kalpalatā itself (eva) in (the treatment of) Yamakas."[1] If this is a reference to illustrations it is possible that Kalpalatā contained illustrations.[2] These were borrowed from earlier works, and are the general stock-in-trade found in Sanskrit Poetics, which is freely availed of by almost all the later writers on the subject.

From the above data we can surmise that Kalpalatā contained Kārikās, each Kārikā being followed by brief discussion on it and the latter was followed by apt illustrations. Such a conjecture may be correct in view of the fact that the author of Kalpalatā was highly influenced by Bhoja's S. K. and it is possible that his work was largely modelled upon the same pattern.

As neither Kalpalatā nor Pallava is recovered it is not possible to say categorically whether Viveka explains Kalpalatā or Pallava at a particular place. Despite this we have above ventured to reconstruct K*alpalatā*. This is completely hypothetical and like several hypotheses it may be confirmed or contradicted by later and better research.

Next in sequence, both chronologically and constructionally, comes Pallava, which is a gloss on K*alpalatā*, hence the discussion of its structural nature is out of question. It obviously follows K*alpalatā*. It is possible that like K*alpalatā* and Viveka, K*alpapallava* also contained much that was borrowed

Last comes Viveka. It obviously follows the original and its first commentary and its structure is like that of any other commentary in Sanskrit literature. It picks up a few words from the original and perhaps from Pallava also and tries to explain, interpret and at times illustrate them. Sometimes it indulges in lengthy discussions on certain topics which are often borrowed.

1. एतच्च कल्पलतायामेव यमकेषु निदर्शयिष्यते । (Viveka P. 25, l. 6)
2. It is possible to interpret the word 'निदर्शयिष्यते' as 'will be treated'. But looking to the context it seems that it may be interpreted as above. If not it may be that Kalpalatā might not have any illustrations at all, yet to us it does not seem so.

Authorship of Viveka :

We have more than once hinted at the analogous characters of Hemacandra's Viveka[1] and Kalpalatā-viveka. One may be tempted to carry this analogy to its logical conclusion and to assert that just as Kāvyānuśāsana-viveka is written by Hemacandra, i. e. to say by the author of the original work and its auto-commentary, so also Kalpalatā-viveka was written by the author of Kalpalatā. This may appear a fortiori justifiable because Kalpalatāviveka does not have a separate maṅgala verse of its own and also because both these works are contemporaneous. Yet such a conclusion would be faulty; for it appears that the author of Kalpalatā and Pallava is not the author of Viveka, for the following reasons :—

(i) Viveka is not mentioned by Devasūri, even though it discusses the verse 'sūryācandramasau &c.'[2] in brief.

(ii) The introductory verse implies that Viveka is not an integral part of Kalpalatā, for it offers an apology for its very composition not merely there but also in the first of the two verses at the colophon of the work. The note on this latter verse also suggests that Viveka is an additional commentary or elucidation (vivaraṇa) yet it should not be considered redundant as it contributes to the easy understanding of the work. Similarly the metaphor in the last verse at the colophon of the work points out that Viveka is not an organic part of Kalpalatā But it bears the same relation to the original as a bannerstaff to the temple[3] whereon it is hoisted.

(iii) The method[4] of explaining words from the original also suggests that Viveka is not a sub-auto-commentary, in this it stands in vivid contrast with Hemacandra's Viveka. This suggests that Viveka had a separate author. While dealing with Arītimad doṣa Kalpalatā borrows from Bhoja's S. K. . Bhoja[5] enumerates the varieties of this doṣa in a particular order

5. The remarks of Viveka are: अमीषामुद्देशपरिहारे कारणं चिन्त्यम् । P. 24. l. 10.

This has been pointed out later in the survey of the contents. In Bhoja's S. K., the order is : कान्तिविपर्यय, प्रसादविपर्यय, अर्थव्यक्तिविपर्यय (these are अर्थप्रधान type). (vide S. K. I 33 : या तु कान्तिप्रसादार्थव्यक्तीनामन्यथागतिः । अर्थप्रधानः प्रोक्तः स वाक्ये गुणविपर्ययः ॥). In the treatment in the following Kārikā Bhoja takes अप्रसन्न or प्रसादविपर्यय first, अर्थव्यक्तिविपर्यय next and ग्राम्य or कान्तिविपर्यय the last, Thus there is an unwarranted change in the order, which has heen called into question by Viveka at P. 42, l. 19.

and alters this order while giving their detailed treatment. Kalpalatā follows suit. But Viveka questions this unwarranted change in the order, by both, and pleads complete inability to divine the reason for such a change. It would not have done so if the author were common. He would have effected the change instead of meekly imitating Bhoja.

(iv) At one place in Viveka there is a reference[1] which makes a distinction between the treatment in Pallava and that by the author of Viveka (asmābhiḥ). This distinction would be needless if the author of the two were the same.

If Ambāprasāda is not the author of Viveka, who that author is, would be the next question. It is not possible to give a positive reply. Prof. H. R. Kāpadia notes,[2] "a commentary named Viveka alias Pallava is believed to have been written by Vibudhamandiragani. It begins with the words yatpallavena vivṛtam &c." ('yat Pallave na vivṛtam' is the correct reading). He further notes that it is mentioned in the Jinaratnakoṣa that a ms. written in V. S. 1205 is available in the Jesalmer Bhaṇḍāra.

In the above reference in the Jinaratnakośa[3], as quoted by Prof. Kapadia, one Vibudhamandiragaṇī is believed to be the author of Viveka. We are not in a position to say anything definite, either for or against the proposition. Yet it is possible that this surmise is ill-founded if not unfounded. It has its root probably in the last verse at the end of the present work, wherein Kalpalatā is compared, as noted earlier, to a temple (vibudha-mandira). We do not know whether there is a double entendre here. If so, it might refer to the author indirectly. But the occurence of this verse even below the colophon, marking the end of Kalpalatā, may argue against such an attribution. Whatever be the case it is certain that even according to this reference, the author of Viveka is imagined to be distinct from the author of the original.

The next question would be concerning the religious creed of the author of Viveka, whoever he be. One may ask whether he was a Jaina or a non-Jain.

If we accept the above proposition from the Jinaratnakoṣa, we also accept that the author of Viveka was a Jain, as the very name suggests.

1. Viveka P, 253, l. 5: 'तत एव च ध्वनिकारेण रूपकध्वनिरेवायमिति व्यपदिष्टम् । अस्माभिरपि ध्वनिस्वरूपनिरूपणे तन्मतेनैव तथैव प्रागुपदर्शितम् । पल्लवेऽपि लक्षणाविचारे नृपतेर्भगवद्वासुदेवताक्षेपेण रूपकमेव, प्रतीयमानं तथैवोपवर्णितम् इति ॥' Here the use of two अपिs clearly points to distinct authorship of the two viz. Pallava and Viveka.
2. Jain Saṁskṛta Sāhityano Itihāsa Vol. I (P. 171).
3. Jinaraṭnakośa (Part I, P. 89).

Prof. Kāpadia actually takes him for a Jain as is clear from his mention of Kalpalatā-viveka along with other Jain Sanskrit works. This is natural, as he acquiesces in this attribution. If we do not find positive grounds for accepting Vibudha-mandira-gaṇi to be the author of Viveka, we have to depend on other available evidence.

Generally the prefatory maṅgala verse of a work provides a clue to the creed of its author.[1] Unfortunately, Viveka does not have its separate maṅgala, as already pointed out.

Viveka quotes (at P. 1, l. 16) a Prākrit verse[2] extoling Jainism, which may prima facie indicate that the author of Viveka was a Jain. It is possible that he was one; yet the following facts should be noted:

(i) He quotes illustrations from Mimāṁsā every now and then, even where several Brāhmin commentators on K. P. under similar circumstances do not do so.[3]

(ii) While explaining the Mimāṁsā Sūtra,[4] "guṇānāñ ca parārthatvāt asaṁbandhaḥ samatvāt syāt," he quotes illustrations from Śābarabhāṣya. He differs here from Hemacandra, who does not even quote this sūtra, in the same context, even though he generally borrows from Mammaṭa. He gives another rule to the same effect[5] which does not even smack of Mīmāṁsā.[6]

(iii) The ill. of Āgama-viruddha[7] in Bhāmaha's Kāvyālaṁkāra offends against Brāhmaṇa Āgama, which prohibits drinking of Soma for all other castes than Brahmins. This ill. is not found in Viveka, yet it should not be an indication of its author's religious creed inasmuch as Viveka merely comments on Kalpalatā, whose author, as noted above, was mostly a Jain.

These are some of the points worth considering before we come to any definite decision. Yet it is quite probable that he was a Jain.

A Survey of the Contents :—

It has been already pointed out that Kalpalatā is divided into four chapters or sections (paricchedas):

---

[1] Though this is not always a conformatory test. In the case of Bhāmaha, for instance, the maṅgala verse, is a subject of controversy. According to some it refers to the Buddha, according to others to Lord Śiva. Probably he extols Śiva here.

[2] जिणधम्मो मोक्खफलो सासयसोक्खो जिणेहिं पन्नत्तो ।

[3] e. g. while explaining 'संसर्गो विप्रयोगश्च &c. (P. 3, l. 2 ff.), (P. 235, l. 11 ff.), & so on.

[6] Contrast also माणिक्यचन्द्र's संकेत (P. 147) where मीमांसा is not even referred to.

[7] भूभृतां पीतसोमानां न्याय्ये वर्त्मनि तिष्ठताम् etc. । B. K. L. IV. 49.

(1) Doṣa-darśana — the section wherein the blemishes of poetry are shown — pointed out.

(2) Guṇa-vivecana — the section wherein the excellences of poetry are critically discussed.

(3) Śabdālaṁkāra-darśana — the section wherein the figures based on sound (śabda) are shown.

(4) Arthālaṁkāra-nirṇaya — the last section wherein the figures based on sense (artha) are settled.

It is interesting to note that the names of these chapters are all very significant. Doṣas or blemishes are to be pointed out so as to enable the aspiring poets to avoid them. Guṇas are to be critically discerned from the apparant qualities of Kāvya, which can be achieved by the mere avoidance of some doṣas. Figures of sound are to be actually paraded while figures of sense offer a source of controversies as to their number, names, varieties etc. and therefore they are to be settled.

Strange as it would appear Viveka does not have a separate maṅgala verse of its own. It begins with the verse, "yat pallave na vivṛtam &c", which as we saw above not only offers an apology for this work but also suggests its scope. After this it comments on the maṅgala verse[1] of the original — Kalpalatā, which probably had more than one such verse[2].

Most of the writers on Sanskrit Poetics from Bharata downwards have indulged in lengthy discussions regarding the blemishes (doṣāḥ) of Poetry. Poetry should be free from blemishes as far as it can. A poem which contains poetic blemishes or even a single palpable blemish ceases to be good poetry. Not a word should be defective in a poem. As by a bad son so by a bad poem one is disparaged.[3] Daṇḍī tells us that even the slightest blemish would disfigure a poem just in the same way as a small lesion of leprosy would spoil even a beautiful figure.[4] Bhoja points out that whoever knows how to avoid the threefold doṣas deserves to compose a poem.[5] Defective language (in a poem) proclaims the stupidity of the poet.[1] Bhāmaha goes a step further and says, "to be a bad poet is nothing short of death for a sensible person[2]". Rājaśekhara almost repeats this idea when he tells us that it is better not to be a poet at all rather than be a bad poet, for bad poetry is living death.[3] Thus it is imperative that a good poet should avoid poetical blemishes. This notion has landed Mammaṭa into a very difficult position because he incorporated adoṣatva (complete absence of doṣa or blemish) as an integral part of his definition of Poetry[4]. He has invited criticism from writers on Poetics like Viśvanātha[5] and Jagannātha[6]. It would be proper to say that the merest blemish should not and as a matter of fact does not deprive a poem of its claim to good poetry. It is rather the nature of the blemish that matters and what does not hinder the relish of Poetry may be forgiven. Yet good poetry should, as far as possible, be rid of any blemish and in order that an aspiring poet may remain alive to this, theorists in Sanskrit poetics bear a torch-light to illumine his career. It is, therefore, natural that a treatment — even an elaborate one — of poetical blemishes should find its place in a work on Poetics. It is no wonder, therefore, that doṣas have been treated here, as in the Sarasvatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa of Bhoja, in the first chapter.

[1] The mangla verse is :

सूर्याचन्द्रमसौ यत्र चित्रं खद्योतपोतकौ ।
नित्योदयजुषे तस्मै परस्मै ज्योतिषे नमः ॥ (Viveka P. 1, l. 8)

[2] Or the other verse is the Maṅgala of Kalpa-pallava.

[3] सर्वथा पदमप्येकं न निगाद्यमवद्यवत् । विलक्ष्मणा हि काव्येन दुःसुतेनेव निन्द्यते ॥ B. K. L. I. 11.

[4] तदल्पमपि नोपेक्ष्यं काव्ये दुष्टं कथंचन । स्याद्वपुः सुन्दरमपि श्वित्रेणैकेन दुर्भगम् ॥ K. D. I. 7.

[5] एवं पदानां वाक्यानां वाक्यार्थानां च यः कविः ।
दोषान्हेयतया वेत्ति स काव्यं कर्तुमर्हति ॥ S. K. I. 58.

Even though we do not find the definition of a doṣa in Viveka, it was probably defined in Kalpalatā. Early writers, like Bharata, Bhāmaha and Daṇḍī do not define a doṣa., though they all treat of them. Vāmana defines doṣas thus: guṇa-viparyayātmāno doṣāḥ[7], the essence of doṣas (blemishes) consists in being the reverse of guṇas (excellences). This is a negative definition, and informs us but little about poetical blemishes. Mammaṭa defines a doṣa as "mukhyārtha-hatiḥ[8]," a doṣa is that which vitiates the principal (mukhya)[9] import (artha) of a poem. The principal import is Rasa (sentiment). Thus according to Mammaṭa whatever impedes the apprehension of Rasa is a doṣa.

Bharata enumerates 10 doṣas[10], Bhāmaha gives 21[11] while Daṇḍi has given 10 doṣas[1]. But they do not classify them. Vāmana is perhaps the first to classify doṣas into pada-doṣa, padārtha-doṣa, vākya-doṣa and vākyārtha-doṣa. He deals with 5 blemishes of Pada (word), five of Padārtha (meaning of word), two of Vākya (sentence) and six of Vākyārtha (meaning of a sentence).[2] Bhoja does not define a doṣa[3] in his Sarasvatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa but classifies doṣas into Pada-doṣas, Vākya-doṣas, and Vākyārtha-doṣas, each variety having 16 doṣas under it[4]. None of these treats of Rasa-doṣas. Rudraṭa is perhaps the first who includes a Rasa-doṣa in his treatment of Doṣa[5]. It is Dhvanyāloka that gives a detailed treatment of Rasa-doṣas[6], and following this Mammaṭa has included Rasa-doṣas in the chapter on doṣas in his Kāvya-prakāśa. He divides doṣas into four main types viz those pertaining to Pada (word), to Vākya (sentence), to Artha (sense) and finally to Rasa (sentiment). Of these Rasa-doṣa is the most serious as Rasa is principal, next comes Artha-doṣa for it is meaning (artha) that helps us apprehend Rasa and is thus subservient to the latter, last comes Pada-doṣa, word (pada) helps understand the meaning and is therefore subservient to artha.[7]

Kalpalatā has followed Mammaṭa in its treatment of doṣas, as elsewhere, and classified them into four varieties viz Pada-doṣa, Vākya-doṣa Artha-doṣa and Rasa-doṣa. Accordingly the first section (Priccheda) is divided into four sub-sections thus :

(1) Pada-doṣas (Pp. 1 to 13). (2) Vākya-doṣas (Pp. 13 to 24).
(3) Artha-doṣas (Pp. 24 to 78). (4) Rasa-doṣas (Pp. 78 to 90).

(I) Pada-doṣas (P. 1, l. 24) :

(1) Śruti-kaṭu : (P. 1, l. 25) Word or words, which are unpleasent to the ears are called Śruti-kaṭu. It is of two types—pada-gata (pertaining to a word), and samāsa-gata (pertaining to a compound).

The ill.* of pada-gata-śruti-kaṭu-doṣa is : (P. 1, l. 25)

(2) Asamartha : (P. 2, l. 22). A pada is called Asamartha when it fails to convey its expressed sense, as its capacity to express that sense is impeded by some or the other reason.[1] It is of four types:

(i) If a root changes its meaning when it is preceded by an upasarga (prefix), it becomes incompetent to convey its original sense. The root 'sthā' means to stand, but 'prasthitaḥ' fails to convey the sense of 'sthitaḥ'. Hence it is Asamartha.[2]

(ii) If a root mentioned in the Dhātu-pāṭha as having a particular meaning is not ordinarily used in that sense, it is Asamartha. The root 'han' also means 'to go' but 'hanti' does not convey that sense, for it ordinarily means 'kills'.[3]

(iii) (P. 2, l. 22) When a word, etymologically competent to convey some meaning, cannot convey the same, as it is conventionally restricted to some other sense, it is 'Asamartha'. 'Jalabhṛt' may etymologically mean 'ocean', yet it cannot do so as it is conventionally confined to the sense of cloud.[4]

(iv) (P. 2, l. 23) If a word able to express some general sense is used, yet its particular import cannot be decided, it is 'Asamartha' of the last type. For example 'meghacchavim ārurohāśvam', here 'meghacchaviṁ', meaning, 'of the colour of the cloud', does not convey a particular sense, for clouds have several colours.[5]

(P. 2, l. 24) After this the exception to the last variety of Asamartha is given : when a word is accompanied by a gesture its particular meaning can be decided though it has several meanings. Hence there would be no Asamartha-doṣa.[6]

Kalpalatā quotes R. K. L. VI. 9 and Viveka gives ills. of Prakaraṇa, etc.[7] whereby the sense of a multivocal word is restricted to one of its several senses.

(3) Asādhu-pada-doṣa : (P. 6, l. 7) The discussion of ungrammatical and degenerated forms of words is given with a view to introduce the asādhu-pada-doṣa. When a form not warranted by grammar is used it gives rise to this doṣa.

[1] R. K. L. VI. 3.
[2] (ibid) VI. 4.
[3] (ibid) VI. 5.
[4] (ibid) VI. 6.
[5] (ibid) VI. 7.
[6] (ibid) VI. 8.
[7] These are borrowed from Mimāṁsā and Pāṇini's Aṣṭādhyāyī.

But when such forms of words are used to imitate somebody's speech they do not involve any blemish e.g.

"kāle māṣaṁ sasye māsaṁ vadati śakāṣaṁ yaśca sakāśam |
uṣṭre lumpati saṁ vā ṣaṁ tasmai dattā vikaṭa-nitambā ||"[1]

Here māṣa (month), māsa (grain) etc. are faultless.

(4) Nirarthaka (P. 7, l. 6) : Where a word is used without any purpose, it is Nirarthaka. Viveka points out that as the word has no sense (artha) here this does not become an artha-doṣa. The ill. is:[2] ādāvañjana-puñja-lipta-vapuṣāṁ śvāsānilollāsita-protsarpad virahānalena ca tataḥ santāpitānāṁ dṛśām | sampraty eva niṣekam aśrupayasā devasya cetobhuvo

bhallīnām iva pāna-karma kurute kāmaṁ kuraṅgekṣaṇā ||

Here the plural in 'dṛśām' as well as the ātmane-pada in 'kurute' is meaningless (nirarthaka). The ātmane-pada in 'karute' does not involve asādhutva-doṣa for the ātmane-pada fails to convey the connection of the fruit of the action with the subject or agent (Kartā), hence the rule 'svaritañitaḥ kartrabhiprāye kriyā-phale' (Pāṇini I. 3.72) does not apply here.

(5) Avācaka (P. 7, l. 13) : Bhāmaha defines this doṣa thus:—

sākṣād arūḍhaṁ vācye 'rthe nābhidhānaṁ pratīyate | (B. K. L. I. 41.) when a word is not directly current in the sense sought to be expressed by it, it is avācaka with reference to the latter mentioned sense. Ill.: 'himāpahāmitradharair vyāptaṁ vyoma', here 'himāpahāmitra' means water, and the whole compoud means 'by clouds'.

(6) Anyārtha (P. 7, l. 16)[3] : Bhāmaha defines it thus: anyārthaṁ vigame vitteḥ | B. K. L. I. 40. It is a word (pada) which has a meaning other than the one established by vṛddha-vyavahāra (dealings of the elderly people). The ill. is (P. 7, l. 27): 'vijahruḥ tasya tāḥ śokam' | B. K. L. I. 40 c. Here 'vijahruḥ is used to express the sense of 'jahruḥ' (drove away, dispelled). But Bhāmaha says "krīḍāyāṁ vihṛtaṁ ca tat"[4] — 'vihṛta' is used to express the sense of 'krīḍā' or 'graceful movements'.

1. Quoted by Namisādhu in his gloss on R. K. L. VI. 47.
2. Ill. of निरर्थक in K. P. VII, v. 201. Kalpalatā borrows from K. P. : प्रधानक्रियाफलस्य कर्मसंबन्धे कर्त्रभिप्रायक्रियाफलाभावात् । K. P. (P. 286)
3. Bhāmaha gives Kliṣṭārtha first. This is not traceable in Viveka. It seems that according to Viveka the ill. of Kliṣṭa is not given by Bhāmaha. (Cf. उद्यानवृत्ति on B. K. L. I. 40).
4. Note the readings :- Prof. Tatachari reads 'Vikṛtam', here it is 'Vihṛtam'. Cf. also his interpretation of this verse. According to him the second line contains two ills. the first half of Kliṣṭa and the other half of Anyārtha (vide उद्यानवृत्ति on B. K. L. I. 40–P. 22).

Vāmana defines Anyārtha thus (P. 8, l. 1):

'rūḍhicyutam anyārtham |' K. L. S. II. i. 11. If a word, restricted by convention (rūḍhi) to some particular meaning, is used to convey some other etymological sense it is anyārtha' e. g. when 'Jala-dhara' is used to convey 'ocean' it is anyārtha.[1]

(7) Aślīla (P. 8, l. 14): Bhāmaha points out that the use of indecorous words does not involve aślīla-doṣa under certain conditions. Hence words like gaṇḍa are also unobjectionable.[2] (P. 8, l. 14) For instance:

'āpāṇḍu-gaṇḍam etat te vadanaṁ vanajekṣaṇe,' here gaṇḍa is unobjectionable ('saṅgamāt pāṇḍu-śabdasya gaṇḍaṁ sādhu &c / B. K. L. I. 56)[3]

Vāmana defines Aślīla thus:

'asabhyārthāntaram asabhya-smṛti-hetuś cāślīlam |' K. L. S. II. i. 14. The use of a multivocal word, one of whose meanings is indecent, results in this doṣa, e.g. 'varcaḥ' which means lustre as well as faeces, is asabhyārthāntara.

A word, a portion, of which evokes some indecent or inauspicious idea, is also aślīla, e.g. 'kṛkāṭikā' here 'kāṭi' the latter part, means 'hearse', it is therefore asabhya-smṛti-hetu.

But there are exceptional circumstances when such words are not objectionable[4]: (i) when the indecent sense is not welknown (gupta) e.g. sambādhaḥ (ii) when the primary sense is not indecent e.g. janma-bhūmiḥ and (iii) when the word having indecent sense is accepted (saṁvṛta) in the world as decent, this doṣa — does not arise e. g. subhagā, bhaginī, kumārī, upasthānam, dohada[5].

(8) Apratīta (P. 9, l. 5): According to Rudraṭa it is of two types saṁśayavat and asaṁśaya.

(i) When on account of common qualities etc. a word equally capable of being used to denote many things, is used as a name of any one of them, it is doubtful (saṁśayavat) e.g. 'himahā' is applicable both to the sun and the fire, as both can dispel cold, it would be apratīta when used as a name for any one of them, as it is not so restricted by convention.

[1] According to Rudraṭa this is Sasaṁśaya type of Asamartha (vide K. L, VI. 6).

[2] B. K. L. I. 54, 55.

[3] Prof. Tatācharya reads : गण्डः साधु यथोदितम् । and suggests a variant गण्डः साधुः । The reading in the Kalpalatā is "गण्डं साधु ।' This presents some difficulties from the stand-point of grammar.

[4] न गुप्तलक्षितसंवृतानि । K. L. S. II. i. 15.

[5] साधारणमपरेष्वपि गुणादि कृत्वा निमित्तमेकस्मिन् ।
यत् कृतमभिधानतयार्थे संशयवद्यथा हिमहा ॥ R. K. L. VI. 12.

(ii) (P. 9, l. 14) When a word is, by one's own imagination, used to express some particular meaning without any warranty of usage or convention, it is Asaṁśaya type of Apratīta. e.g. aśva-yoṣin-mukhārciṣmān, when used to convey the sense of 'submarine fire', it is Apratīta of the second type.[1]

(9) Grāmya : (P. 9, l. 14) Whatever word is improper to a particular context is Grāmya. It is of two types[2], Vaktṛ-grāmya and Vastu-grāmya.

Vaktṛ-grāmya is the violation of the rules about the proper mode of address to be used by the three types of characters[3] viz uttama (high), madhyama (middling) and adhama (low)[4].

Vastu-viṣayaka-grāmya : (P. 9, l. 24) If a word having two meanings, one decent and the other indecent, evokes the indecent import even when it is employed in its decent sense, this Grāmya-doṣa arises.[5] The ill. (P. 9, l. 24) is :

vārayati sakhī tasyā yathā yathā tathā tathā sāpi |
roditi tarām varākī bāṣpa-bhara-klīnna-gaṇḍa-mukhī ||[6]

Here 'bāṣpa-klinna-gaṇḍa-mukhī' (whose cheeks are wet with tears) evokes an indecent sense (viz whose face has on it a putrid boil), hence it is Grāmya[7].

(P. 9, l. 26) Sometimes such a use ceases to be offensive when on account of the particular case-ending, an indecent word does not evoke the memory of its indecent sense. The ill. (P. 9, l. 26) is :

4. Kalpalatā borrows here from Rudraṭa's Kāvyālaṁkāra and from Namisādhu's Vṛ on it. In interpreting R. K. L. VI. 17 ff. the author of Kalpalatā seems to ha followed Namisādhu, but we think that the illustrations given by Rudraṭa at R. K. L. VI. 19 & 20, are illustrations of Vaktṛ-viṣaya-grāmya, which he defines at R. K. L. VI. 18, while Grāmya pertaining to Vastu (theme or description) is defined R. K. L. VI. 21 and illustrated at (ibid) VI. 22. It appears that Mammaṭa (K. P. 371) and Hemacandra (H. K. S. P. 178) take R. K. L. VI. 19 and 20, to illustrations of Vaktṛ-viṣayaka-grāmya, though according to both of them this Rasa-doṣa. Hemacandra even quotes Rudraṭa.
5. R. K. L. VI. 21.
6. (ibid) VI. 22.
7. अर्थविशेषवशाद्वा सभ्येऽपि तथा क्वचिद्विभक्तेर्वा ।

katham iva vairi-gajānāṁ mada-salila-klinna-gaṇḍa-bhittīnām |
durvārāpi ghaṭā 'sau viśāṁpate dārītā bhavatā ||[1]

Here the words 'klinna-gaṇḍa etc.' and 'viśāṁpate' do not evoke indecent sense as the particular import is the (description of the) elephant and the Heroic Sentiment.

The third type of Grāmya-doṣa (P. 9, l. 28) arises when the convention laid down in the following Kārikā is violated, due to improper use of certain words:[2] —

mañjīrādiṣu raṇita-prāyān pakṣiṣu ca kūjita-prabhṛtīn | maṇitaprāyān surate
meghādiṣu garjita-prāyān ||[3]

To describe the different types of sounds a different word should be used to denote each type of sound. For instance, one should say 'jingling of (raṇita) of anklets' (mañjīra), 'cooing etc. (kūjita) of birds,' 'panting (maṇita) in love-sport', 'rumbling (garjita) of clouds' and so on. Thus, 'neighing (heṣatiḥ) of horses' 'speaking (bhaṇatiḥ) of men', 'groaning (kaṇatiḥ) of the afflicted', 'blowing (vātiḥ) of the wind'[4], would be according to convention But departure from this conventional usage by using these words to express sounds other than they express conventionally, would result in the third type of Grāmya-doṣa.[5] Rudraṭa[6] does not give any illustration.

(P. 10, l. 7) Grāmya-pada-doṣa is treated here according to Bhoja. According to him grāmya word is that which has an indecent, an

2. दृष्ट्वा प्रयुज्यमानानेवंप्रायांस्तथा प्रयुञ्जीत । (ibid) VI. 26 ab.
3. (ibid) VI. 25. Also quoted by Hemacandra (P. 234) and Mammaṭa (P. 316).
4. It should be noted that both Kalpalatā-viveka (P. 9, ll. 28 ff.) and the Viveka of Hemacandra (P. 234, ll. 18 ff.) borrow from नमि० on R. K. L. VI. 25-26.
5. अन्यत्रैतेऽनुचिताः शब्दार्थत्वे समानेऽपि । R. K. L. VI. 26 cd.
6. According to Mammaṭa this is Prasiddhi-hata-doṣa (K. P. P. 316). It would be Asamartha-Pada-dosa according to Bhoja (vide S. K. I. 10 ab). Mammaṭa gives the following verse to illustrate this doṣa :

   "महाप्रलयमारुतक्षुभितपुष्करावर्तकप्रचण्डघनगर्जितप्रतिरुतानुकारी मुहुः । रवः श्रवणभैरवः स्थगितरोदसीकन्दरः कुतोद्य समरोदधेरयमभूतपूर्वः पुरः ॥"

   वेणीसंहार III. 4.

   Here 'रवः', which is conventionally used to denote the croaking of a frog, is used to describe the noise of the violent commotion on the battlefield. Hemacandra gives the same verse to illustrate this doṣa which is Avācaka-doṣa according to him (vide H. K. S. P. 232).

inauspicious, or a loathsome meaning[1]. It is thus of three types, (i) Aślīlārtha (ii) Amaṅgalārtha and (iii) Ghṛṇāvad-artha. The first variety is further divided into Asabhyārtha, Asabhyārthāntara and Asabhya-smṛti-hetu.[2]

The ill. of Asabhyārthantara is (P. 10, l. 7):

vidyām abhyasyato rātrāv eti yābhavataḥ priyā |
vanitā-guhya-keśānāṁ kathaṁ te pelabandhanam ||[3]

The ill. of Asabhya-smṛti-hetu is not traceable in Viveka.

Amaṅgalārtha type of Aślīla also is divided by Bhoja into three varieties viz., Aśastārtha, Aśastārthāntara and Aśasta-smṛti-hetu.[4]

The ill. of Aśastārthāntara is (P. 10, l. 8):

pravāsayati yā kāntaṁ vasante gṛha-saṁsthitam |
vināśapathadānena piśācī sā na cāṅganā ||[5]

The ill. of Aśasta-smṛti-hetu is (P. 10, l. 10):

mārīco 'yaṁ munir yasya kṛtyā kālāntakālaye |
patnyāṁ saṅkrandanādīnām sutānām āptaye 'bhavan ||

The third variety of Grāmya viz, Ghṛṇāvad-artha, is further divided into three types: Ghṛṇāvad artha, Ghṛṇāvad-arthāntara and Ghṛṇāvat-smṛti-hetu.

The ill. of the second variety is not traceable here.

The ill. of the third variety is (P. 10, l. 13):

pratyārdayanto rūḍhānī madaneṣu-vraṇāni naḥ |
hṛdayaṁ kledayanty ete purīṣaṇḍa-mahaddrumāḥ ||[6]

After this, the exceptions to this doṣa, as stated by Bhoja, are given. (P. 10, l. 14):

grāmyaṁ ghṛṇāvad aślīlāmaṅgalārthaṁ yadīritam |
tatsamvīteṣu gupteṣu lakṣiteṣu na duṣyati ||[7]

Which means, according to Viveka, that the first, the second and the third varieties of the three types of Grāmya are faultless when they are respectively saṁvīta, gupta, and lakṣita. Thus aślīlārtha, amaṅgalārtha and ghṛṇāvad-artha are faultless when they are saṁvīta; aślīlārthāntara, amaṅgalārthāntara and ghṛṇāvad-arthāntara are faultless when they are gupta; and lastly aślīla-smṛti-hetu, amaṅgala-smṛti-hetu and ghṛṇāvat-smṛti-hetu are faultless when they are lakṣita. The ills. are as follows :

[1] S. K. I. 14.

[2] The last two varieties are the same as Vāmana's varieties of Aślīla noted above. Vāmana does not give Asabhyārtha as a variety of Aślīla, as it is too obvious (Vivek P. 8, l. 26). Probably Kalpalatā does not give its illustration for the same reason.

[3] S. K. I. v. 17.

[4] This is Vāmana's Amaṅgalātaṅkadāyi, and the last two varieties of Amaṅgala given by Bhoja correspond to Amaṅgalārthāntara and Amaṅgala-smṛti-hetu of Vāmana.

[5] S. K. I. v. 20.

[6] S. K. I. v. 24.

[7] S. K. I. 105.

(i) aślīlārtha (saṁvīta) : ill. is not traceable here.

(ii) amaṅgalārtha (saṁvīta) is faultless in the following verse (P. 10, l. 16) :

bhadre māri praśastaṁ vada sadasi mudā nṛtya kṛtye muhūrtaṁ mṛtyo ratnaiś catuṣkaṁ viracaya racayārātrikaṁ kāla-rātri / cāmuṇḍe muṇḍa-mālām upanaya vinayasvāyatāṁ bhairavīrṣyām evaṁ deve bhavānīṁ vahati parijana-vyāhṛtis tryāyatāṁ vaḥ //[1]

(iii) Ghṛṇāvad-artha (saṁvīta) ill. is not traceable here.

(iv) Aślīlārthāntara (gupta) : the ill. is (P. 10, l. 15) :

sudustyajā yadyapi janmabhūmir gajair asaṁbādhamayāṁbabhūve / sa te 'nuneyaḥ subhago 'bhimānī bhaginy-ayaṁ naḥ prathamābhisaṁdhiḥ //[2]

(v) Amaṅgalārthāntara (gupta) : ill. is not traceable here.

(vi) Ghṛṇāvad-arthāntara (gupta) ill. is not traceable here.

(vii) Aślīla-smṛti-hetu (lakṣita) : ill. not traceable in Viveka.

(viii) Amaṅgala-smṛti-hetu (lakṣita) : ill. is (P. 10, l. 17) :

ko'bhipretaḥ susaṁsthānas tasyā iti na niścayaḥ /
āśā-piśācikaiṣā tu kumārī māṁ variṣyati //[3]

(ix) Ghṛṇāvat-smṛti-hetu (lakṣita) the ill. is (P. 10, l. 19) :

vipūya-raśanāvantaḥ palāśāṣāḍha-dhāriṇaḥ / brahma-varcasvino yānti dvija-pogaṇḍakā ime //[4]

(P. 10, l. 20). Thus several other exceptions may be found[5]. In short, due to the charm of the substratum even an ungainly thing resorting to it appears charming even like the black collyrium applied to the beautiful eyes of the beloved. Again sometimes due to a peculiar setting a contrasting thing may shine to an advantage just as a dark leaf woven in the garlands does.[1]

[1] S. K. I. v. 144. The reading in the last line is वदति in S. K., here it is वहति. The comments on this verse are borrowed from Bhoja (vide S. K. P. 100).

[2] (ibid) I. v. 142.

[3] (ibid) I. v. 146.

[4] (ibid) I. v. 149.

[5] Kalpalatā here borrows from Bhoja's Vṛtti preceding S. K. I. 106. It runs thus : एवमन्यदपि द्रष्टव्यम् । अत्र च— (P. 102). These words are meant to introduce S. K. I. 106 & 107.

viz. किञ्चिदाश्रयसबन्धाद्धत्ते शोभामसाध्वपि । कान्ताविलोचनन्यस्तं मलीमसमिवाञ्जनम् । and सन्निवेशवशात्किञ्चिद्विरुद्धमपि शोभते ।
नीलं पलाशमाबद्धमन्तराले स्रजामिव ॥ Cf. B. K. L. I. 55 & 56.

(10) Neyārtha : (P. 10, l. 23) In order to introduce this doṣa the author quotes the famous verse by Kumārila Bhaṭṭa. It is quoted by many writers inter alia by Mammaṭa in his Kāvya-prakāśa (vide P. 260)[2] :

nirūḍhā lakṣaṇāḥ kāścit sāmarthyād abhidhānavat |
kriyante sāṁpratam kāścit kāścinnaiva tvaśaktitaḥ ||[3]

So by the power of lakṣaṇā (secondary function of a word) even words like lipta-viyad [sky besmeared with (lustre)] become easily comprehensible. For instance in — (P. 10, l. 26) :

snigdha-śyāmala-kānti-lipta-viyato vellad balākā ghanā—vātā śīkariṇaḥ payoda-suhṛdām ānanda-kekāḥ kalāḥ |
kāmaṁ santu dṛḍhaṁ kaṭhora-hṛdayo Rāmo 'smi sarvaṁ sahe
Vaidehī nu kathaṁ bhaviṣyati hahā hā devi dhīrā bhava ||[4]

But when lakṣaṇā is resorted to even though it is supported neither by convention (rūḍhi) nor by motive (prayojana), the Neyārtha doṣa arises. The ill. (P. 11, l. 23) is :—

sarat-kāla-samullāsi-pūrṇimā-śarvarī-priyam |
karoti te mukhaṁ tanvi capeṭāpātanātithim ||[5]

Vāmana defines Neyārtha thus (P. 12, l. 3) : Kalpitārthaṁ neyārthaṁ |' (K. L. S. II. i. 12) Where the meaning is some how superimposed even without the intervention of any power of word it is Neyārtha.

The ill. (P. 12, l. 4) is :

sapadi paṅkti-vihaṅgama-nāmabhṛt-tanaya-saṁvalitaṁ balaśālinā |
vipula-parvata-varṣi-śitaiḥ śaraiḥ plavaga-sainyam ulūkajitā jitam ||

Here the sense is inferred with the help of lakṣita-lakṣaṇā without the intervention of any function of word. The word paṅkti (daśa)-vihagaṅgama-nāma-(cakra)-bhṛt (ratha) means Daṣaratha; it is Neyārtha. According to Viveka here Ulūkajit is straightway an ill. of Neyārtha, paṅkti &c. of Neyārtha as well as Kliṣṭārtha for Pankli-vihaṅgama-nāma is neyartha as the meaning is imaginary while tadbhṛt is Kliṣṭa as it is not directly apprehended.

[1] S. K. I. 106 & 107.

[2] In some mss. of K. P. only the last quarter is quoted.

[3] Cf. Viveka (P. 10, l. 22) and Māṇikya's Saṁketa on this Kārikā (K. P. S.-P. 17).

[4] This verse is quoted in Dhvanyāloka. It is commented upon by Abhinavagupta in his Locana on Dhvanyāloka. Viveka here (P. 10, l. 26 ff.) paraphrases Locana. Kalpalatā definitely borrows from there (Cf. Locana P. 168).

[5] Ill. of नेयार्थ in K. P. VII, v. 158. Kalpalatā (vide Viveka P. 11, l. 23) here borrows from K. P. (VII. P. 261) which remarks : 'अत्र चपेटापातनेन निर्जितत्वं लक्ष्यते ।'

(11) Kliṣṭa : (P. 11, l. 11) Where the meaning is not apprehended directly it is Kliṣṭa. The ill. is (P. 12, l. 11) :

atri-locana-saṁbhūta-jyotir-udgama-bhāsibhiḥ / – sadṛśaṁ śobhate 'tyarthaṁ bhūpāla tava ceṣṭitam //

Here the sense of night-lotuses is apprehended not directly but indirectly only after the meanings of several words are cognised from the compound ' atri-locana-saṁbhūta-jyotir-udgama-bhāsibhiḥ '.[1]

Sometimes even when the meaning is not directly apprehended there is no doṣa (blemish) e.g. in ' kāñcī-guṇa-sthānam aninditāyāḥ '[2] where the compound ' kāñcī-guna-sthānaṁ ' means ' waist ' and is apprehended as if the whole compound were one word.

Then (P. 12, l. 14) an ill. is given to show how Viruddha becomes a guṇa under certain conditions. The ill. is quoted from Bhoja :

abhidhāya tadā tad apriyaṁ Sīśupālo'nuśayaṁ paraṁ gataḥ / bhavato 'bhimanāḥ samīhate saruṣaḥ kartum upetya mānanām //[3]

(12) Apuṣṭārtha : (P. 12, l. 16)

When many insignificant words are employed to convey a sense which can be expressed by only one word, the Apuṣṭārtha doṣa arises. The ill. is not traceable in Viveka. (P. 12, l. 17) When many words are employed with some motive there is no doṣa as in 'yā sṛṣṭiḥ sraṣṭur ādyā vahati vidhi-hutam etc. '[4]. Here so many words used are all individually purposeful and significant hence such a usage is a guṇa.

The other ill. of the exception to this doṣa is (P. 11, l. 22) :

dviraṣṭa-varṣākṛtim enam arthinām uśanti kalpopapadaṁ mahīruham / yam Indra-śabdārtha-niṣūdanaṁ Harer Hiraṇya-pūrvaṁ Kaśipuṁ pracakṣate //[5]

Here the words are all helpful to the metre hence faultless.

(13) Deśya : (P. 12, l. 22) Rudraṭa defines this doṣa thus :

1. The ill. of Kliṣṭa is borrowed from the K. P. (VII P. 261) which according to Viveka is the same as Vāmana's Neyārtha.
2. कुमार० I. 37. The Nirṇayasāgar Ed. of Vāmana's K. L. S. (P. 21, II. i. 21) seems to take this as an ill. of Kliṣṭa. This does not seem to be correct. The comma after न in the Vṛtti to Sūtra II. i. 21. is unwarranted. (cp. also Hemacandra's Viveka p. 242, l. 26).
3. S. K. I. v. 136. It seems that according to Kalpalatā Bhoja's Viruddha, Vāmana's Kliṣṭa, and Mammaṭa's Kliṣṭa are the same.
4. Shākuntala I. i.
5. S. K. I. v. 129 (cf. शिशु० I. 42).

prakṛti-pratyaya-mūlā vyutpattir yasya nāsti |
tan mahaḍādi kathañcana rūḍhir iti na saṁskṛte racayet ||[1]

Words like mahaḍa, laḍaha etc. should not be employed in Sanskrit even under a false impression that it is conventional to do so, as their etymology cannot be traced.[2]

(II) Vākya doṣas :

The following Vākya-doṣas – blemishes pertaining to a sentence—are treated here:

(1) Nihatārtha : (P. 13, l. 5) When words having two meanings, one popular and other archaic, are used to denote the latter mentioned sense, Nihatārtha-doṣa results.

The ill. (P. 13, l. 5) is :

sāyaka-sahāya-bāhor makara-dhvaja-niyamita-kṣmādhipateḥ |
abja-suci-bhāsuras te bhātitarām avanipa ślokaḥ ||

Here the words sāyaka. (sword) etc. are used in their archaic senses.[3] Hence Nihatārtha-doṣa is the result.

(2) Gūḍha-śabdābhidhāna : (P. 13, l. 6) Bhāmaha (quoted by Kalpalatā) prescribes :

gūḍha-śabdābhidhānañ ca na prayojyaṁ kathañcana |
sudhiyām api naivedam upakārāya kalpate ||[4]

When names are sought to be expressed in a sentence by means of esoteric (gūḍha) words, it is gūḍha-śabdābhidhāna. The ill. (P. 13. l. 9) is :

asitartitug adricchit svakṣitāṁ patir advidṛk |
amidbhiḥ śubhra-dṛg-dṛṣṭair dviṣo jeghniyiṣīṣṭa vaḥ ||[5]

Here the name 'Kārtikeya' is sought to be expressed by means of several esoteric words hence it is duṣṭa,

(3) Anucitārtha : (P. 13, l. 12) When a word expressing one meaning also suggests a contrary import, this doṣa arises. The ill. (P. 13, l. 12) is :

kuvindas tvaṁ tāvat paṭayasi guṇa-grāmam abhito-yaśo gāyanty ete diśi diśi ca nagnās tava vibho |

[1] R. K. L. VI. 27.

[2] The comments in Viveka (P. 12, l. 22 ff.) are borrowed whole-sale from Namisādhu's Vṛtti on Rudraṭa's above Kārika. Hemacandra also borrows these wholesale (vide Hemacandra's K. S. V. P. 226, l. 23).

[3] Kalpalatā borrows here (P. 13, l. 5) from K. P. (P. 270) : 'अत्र सायकादयः शब्दाः खड्गाब्धिभूचन्द्रयशःपर्यायाः शराद्यर्थतया प्रसिद्धाः । '. K. P. VII. 270.

[4] B. K. L. I. 45.

[5] B. K. I. 46. It is Bhoja's ill. of Kaṭhora (S. K. I. 43).

śaraj jyotsnā-gaura-sphuṭa-vikaṭa-sarvāṅga-subhagā
tathāpi tvat kīrtir bhramati vigatācchādanam iha ||[1]

Here the words kuvinda (a king, also a weaver), paṭayasi (spread, also weave), guṇa (virtues, also threads) etc. ultimately result in disparaging one who is sought to be praised.

(4) Aślīla : (P. 13, l. 14) Vāmana treats this Vākya-doṣa at K. L. S. II. i. 22 : 'antyābhyāṁ vākyaṁ vyākhyātam /' i.e. to say, a sentence also is (Kliṣṭa and) Aślīla.

The ills. are (P. 13, l. 14):

na sā dhanonnatir yā syāt kalatra-sukha-dāyinī /
parārtha-baddha-kakṣāṇāṁ yat satyaṁ pelavaṁ dhanam ||[2] and (P. 14, l. 1):

sopāna-patham utsṛjya vāyu-vega-samuddhatam /
mahā-pathena gatavān kīrtyamāna-guṇo janaiḥ ||[3]

(5) Sandigdha : (P. 14, l. 4) The treatment of this doṣa is not traceable in Viveka. But the exception to this doṣa is discussed.

The ill. is :

pṛthu-kārtasvara-pātraṁ bhuṣita-niḥśeṣa-parijanaṁ deva /
vilasat-kareṇu-gahanaṁ samprati samam āvayoḥ sadanam ||[4]

Here the words are dubious yet by virtue of the expressed sense the particular meaning is brought out and results in Vyāja-stuti, hence Sandigdhatva (dubiousness), is a guṇa.

(P. 14, l. 8) Bhāmaha's definition of saṁśaya (doubt) is given with a view to introduce Sasaṁśaya doṣa according to him :

śruteḥ sāmānya-dharmāṇāṁ viśeṣasyānudāhṛteḥ /
apratiṣṭhaṁ yad atreti tadjñānaṁ saṁśayaṁ viduḥ ||[5]

When properties common to two things are heard but their particular ones are not heard, there arises a doubt as to whether the description applies to the one or to the other. The definition and the ill. of this doṣa cannot be traced.[1]

---

[1] Kalpalatā borrows from K. P. (P. 271) The remarks on this ill. are also borrowed from there : अत्र कुविन्दादिशब्दोऽर्थान्तरं प्रतिपादयन्नुपश्लोक्यमानस्य तिरस्कारं व्यनक्तीत्यनुचितार्थः । P. 271.

[2&3] Vāmana's K. L. S. Vṛtti on II. i. 22. (P. 22).

[4] This is ill. of गुणत्व of संदिग्ध. The remarks (at P. 14, l. 4) are borrowed by Kalpalatā from K. P.: संदिग्धमपि वाच्यमहिम्ना क्वचिन्नियतार्थप्रतीतिकृत्त्वेन व्याजस्तुतिपर्यवसायित्वे गुणः । यथा—K. P. (P. 357).

[5] B. K. L. iv. 17. The words 'भेदसंसर्गाभ्यां ज्ञानम्' (P. 14, l. 15) are meant to explain how right knowledge differs from dubious one. When there is संसर्ग but no cognition of भेद (particular properties), doubt arises.

(6) Neyārtha : (P. 14, l. 19) Bhāmaha's ill. of Neyārtha is discussed. Unfortunately we do not find clue sufficient to get a natural interpretation of this verse The ill. is :

māyeva bhadreti yathā sā cāsādhvī prakalpanā |
veṇudārer iti ca tāṁ nayanti vacanād vinā ||[2]

(7) Kliṣṭa : (P. 14, l. 26) Probably Vāmana's definition of Kliṣṭa is discussed here. It is : vyavahitārtha-pratyayaṁ Kliṣṭam | '[3] when the apprehension of the meaning of a sentence is hindered, it is Kliṣṭa.

(8) Avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa (P. 15, l. 1) Where the order of the subject and the predicate is reversed, this doṣa, arises. The ill. (P. 15, l. 1) is :

nyakkāro 'hyayam eva me yadarayas tatrāpy asau tāpasaḥ so 'pyatraiva &c.[4]

Here 'ayam', the subject should precede 'nyakkara' which is predicated of it.

The other ill. (P. 15, l. 13) is :

apāṅga-saṁsargi-taraṅgitaṁ dṛśor bhruvor arālānta-vilāsi-vellanam | visārī-romāñcana-kañcukaṁ tanos
tanoti yo'sau subhage tavāgataḥ ||

In "yo 'sau", 'yaḥ' and 'asau' are related as subject and predicate yet this relation is not apprehended hence the doṣa arises.[5]

[P. 15, l. 11] The discussion on the relative pronouns 'yat' and 'tad' given here is borrowed from K. P.

'Yat' and 'tad' are permanent correlatives — 'yattador nitya-saṁbandhaḥ', yet sometimes any one of them may remain understood. The exceptional cases are illustrated by Mammaṭa[6], but they are not all traceable here. Thus 'yat' may be used alone without the express mention of its correlative 'tad', provided that 'yat' comes in the subsequent clause (uttara-vākye). This is illustrated thus (P. 15, l. 12) :

[2] B. K. L. I. 39. Prof. Tatachari reads : ' वेणुदाकेः । ' (B. K. L. P. 21)

[3] K. L. S. II. i, 20.

[4] The verse is quoted in the K. P. as an ill. of this doṣa. Kalpalatā borrows from K. P. : अत्रायमेव न्यक्कार इति वाच्यम् । उच्छूनत्वमात्रं चानुवाद्यम्, न वृथात्वविशेषितम् । K. P. (P. 275).

[5] Kalpalatā borrows from K. P. : अत्र योऽसाविति पदद्वयमनुवाद्यविधेयार्थतया विवक्षितमनुवाद्यमात्रप्रतीतिकृत् । (P. 276).

sādhu candramasi puṣkaraiḥ kṛtaṁ mīlitaṁ yad abhirāmatādhike | udyatā jayini kāminī-mukhe
tena sāhasaṁ anuṣṭhitaṁ punaḥ ||[1]

Here 'yad' in the second half of the first line is competent to suggest its correlative 'tad' which is understood and we apprehend thus : 'yan mīlitaṁ tat sādhu kṛtam'.

(9) Viruddha-matikṛt (P. 15, l. 15): When something contrary to what is sought to be conveyed is understood, this doṣa arises.

The ill. is (P. 15, l. 15):

śrita-kṣamā rakta-bhuvaḥ śivāliṅgita-mūrtayaḥ |
vigraha-kṣapaṇenādya śerate te gatāsukhāḥ ||[2]

Instead of understanding that those who are possessed of virtues live in peace we apprehend that they are killed.

(10) Visandhi (P. 15, l. 17): Vāmana defines this doṣa thus : Virūpa-sandhir Visandhi |[3] Awkward junction of letters is Visandhi. It is of three types :[4] Viśleṣa, Aślīlatva & Kaṣṭatva.

(i) Viśleṣa (P. 15, l. 17) : When euphony though necessary is avoided. The ill. is (P. 15, l. 17) :

rājan vibhānti bhavataś caritāni tāni indor dyutiṁ dadhati yāni rasātale 'ntaḥ | dhī-dor-bale atitate ucitārtha-vṛttī
ātanvatī vijaya-saṁpadam etya bhātaḥ ||[5]

(ii) Aślīlatva (P. 15, l. 15) : When the euphony gives rise to indecent meaning. The ill. is (P. 15, l. 18) :

vegāduḍḍīya gagane calaṇḍāmaraceṣṭitaḥ |
ayam utpatate patrī tato 'traiva ruciṁ kuru ||

[1] Kalpalatā here (P. 15, l. 11) borrows from K. P. :
यच्छब्दस्तूत्तरवाक्यानुगतत्वेनोपात्तः सामर्थ्यात्पूर्ववाक्यानुगतस्य तच्छब्दस्योपादानं नोपेक्षते ।
(P. 278)

[2] The ill, is given in K. P. VII (v. 197–P. 284). Probably here also Kalpalatā borrows from K. P..

[3] K. L. S. II. ii. 7. Cf. K. P. : 'विसन्धि सन्धेर्वैरूप्यम् । K. P. VII. (P. 293).

[4] K. L. S. II. ii. 8. Cf. K. P. VII.–P. 293 : 'पदसन्धिवैरूप्यं विश्लेषोऽश्लीलत्वं कष्टत्वं च ।'

[5] The reading in the second line is different in K. P. (P. 293), which reads 'dadhati' but in Viveka (P. 15, l. 17), it is 'jahati'.

Here 'duḍḍī', 'ciṅku', 'laṇḍā' etc. are indecent words in the Kāśmīrian language.

(iii) Kaṣṭatva : The ill, of Kaṣṭatva is not traceable in Viveka. But it is given in Kāvya-prakāśa.[1]

(P. 15, l. 20) Rudraṭa's definition of Visandhi is :-

yasyādipādena samaṁ sandhir na bhaved viruddho vā / tad iti visandi //'[2]

It is of two types, Vigata-sandhi and Viruddha-sandhi. The ill. (P. 15, l. 24) is :

'sa itthaṁ mantharayā bharata āhūtaḥ'/[3] Here 'sa ittham' and 'bharata āhūtaḥ' illustrate Vigata-sandhi, for here absence of euphony is repeatedly seen. But 'mantharayābharataḥ' is an ill. of Viruddha-sandhi, for if these two padas (words) are joined the juncture evokes indecent sense.

(P. 15, l. 26) According to Rudraṭa asandhi or absence of sandhi is a doṣa only when repeated, while viruddha-sandhi has to be studiously avoided.[4]

[The word 'ayuktitaḥ' in the Kārikā (R. K. L. VI. 15.) is interpreted as absence of sandhi (juncture). Then (P. 15, l. 26) another interpretation of 'ayuktitaḥ' is given : Ayukti is the consecutive occurrence of long vowels immediately before and after the caesural break. e.g. āpanna-svaparopabhukta-vibhavā ādāya śubhraṁ yaśaḥ etc. /. Here in the Śārdūlavikrīdita metre the 'yati' (caesura) comes after the twelfth syllable. Here are two long vowels, one before and the other after the caesural break. This is ayukti and is duṣṭa.]

(11) Hata-vṛtta (P. 16, l. 7) : This is of three types :

(i) When the metre becomes harsh even though the rules of prosody are followed this doṣa results. The ill. (P. 16, l. 7) is :

amṛtam amṛtaṁ kaḥ sandeho madhūny api nānyathā madhuram adhikaṁ cūtasyāpi prasanna-rasaṁ phalam / sakṛd api punar madhyasthaḥ san rasāntaravij jano vadatu yadihānyat svādu syāt priyā-daśana-cchadāt //[5]

[1] Vide K. P. VIII. v. 215 (P. 294).

[2] R. K. L. VI. 14.

[3] (ibid) VI. 14.

[4] तत्रासत्सन्धि पदं कृतमसकृदयुक्तितो भवेद्दुष्टम् । दूरं तु वर्जनीयं विरुद्धसन्धि प्रयत्नेन ॥ R. K. L. VI. 15.

[5] Vide K. P. VII (P. 295).

Here 'yadihānyat' is metrically all right yet it leads to harshness and we feel as though there is violation of the caesural rule, hence it is a blemish.

(ii) When a metre regulated by syllabic instants has certain gaṇas (or metrical feet) in it, it becomes unpleasant to the ears. In the ill.[1] (P. 16, l. 18) given here the metre is Āryā, which is regulated by syllabic instants, yet we find here two metrical feet viz dactylus (bhagaṇa) and anapaestus (sagaṇa), which results in harshness.

(iii) When a short syllable at the end of a quarter cannot be considered long though required by the exigence of the metre this doṣa results. The ill. is (P. 16, l. 9):

anyās tā guṇa-ratna-rohaṇa-bhuvo kanyā mṛd anyaiva sā saṁbhārāḥ khalu te 'nya eva vidhinā yaireṣa sṛṣṭo yuvā / śrīmat-kānti-juṣāṁ dviṣāṁ kara-talāt strīṇāṁ nitaṁba-sthalāt dṛṣṭe yatra patanti mūḍha-manasām astrāṇi vastrāṇi ca //[2]

Here 'ca' at the end of the last qnarter is short but cannot be considered long, hence the doṣa arises.

(P. 16, l. 12) Bhāmaha defines Bhinna-vṛtta thus:

guror laghoś ca varṇasya yo 'sthāne racanā-vidhiḥ / tan-nyūnādhikatā vā 'pi bhinna-vṛttam //[3] when the long and short syllables in a metre are not properly disposed or when the number of syllables is more or less than the required number, the Bhinna-vṛtta doṣa arises. The ill. (P. 16, l. 12) is:

bhramati bhramara-mālā kānneṣūnmadā'sau / virahita-ramaṇīko 'rhasy adya gantum //[4].

Here the third syllable in the first line should be short. The second line is short by one syllable.

(P. 16, l. 13) The following verse is quoted by Kalpatatā to illustrate the Hata-vṛtta-doṣa :-

vikasita-sahakāra-hāri-parimala-puñjita-guṁphita-dvirephaḥ / nava-kisalaya-cāru-cāmara-śrīr harati muner api mānasaṁ vasantaḥ //[5]

[1] जं परिहरिउ तीरइ मणअं वि ण सुन्दरत्तणगुणेण । अह णवर जस्स दोसो पडिवक्खेहिं पि पडिवण्णो ॥ (K. P. VII. v. 217).
K. P. reads अह णवर whereas Viveka seems to have 'इय णवर'.

[2] The reading in several mss. and printed editions of K. P. in the first line of this verse is धन्या. But Māṇikyacandra in his Saṁketa reads कन्या (P. 144). Hemacandra has also quoted this verse in his H. K. S. and reads कन्या (vide H. K. S.–P. 214).

[3] B. K. L. IV. 26.

[4] (ibid) IV. 27.

[5] Cf, K. P. VII. v. 218 (P. 296).

Here the last syllable of the first quarter should be long, in the Puṣpitāgrā metre. It is faulty as the short one cannot be considered long.

[P. 16, l. 13][1].

(12) Anabhihita-vācya (P. 17, l. 9): When what should be necessarily mentioned (vācya) is not stated (anabhihita) this doṣa arises. The ill. is (P. 17, l. 9):[2]

tvayi nibaddha-rateḥ priyavādinaḥ praṇaya-bhaṅga-parāṅmukha-cetasaḥ | kam aparādha-lavaṁ mama paśyasi
tyajasi mānini dāsa-janaṁ yataḥ ||[3]

Here 'api' is necessary, yet it is not mentioned hence this doṣa.

Viveka remarks here (P. 17, l. 10 ff.) that sometimes due to the non-mention of a material word the import is damaged e.g. "saṁpado jala-taraṅga-vilolā...kiṁ dhanaiḥ para-hitāni kurudhvam ||"[4] Here the word "kāryam" should have been mentioned after the words "kiṁ dhanaiḥ", as it is dropped the words may mean 'do not oblige others with wealth', which is bad.

Both these verses are the illustrations of Nyūna-pada according to Viveka[5]. Others say that this is Anabhihita-vācya-doṣa. According to them the distinction between the two is that in Nyūna-pada something which is ordinarily to be stated is not mentioned while in Anabhihita-vācya the word which should inevitably be mentioned is left out, consequently the desired import is not conveyed.

[1] Vāmana's definition of Yatibhraṣṭa is discussed, and criticised. Vāmana defines this doṣa thus : 'विरसविरामं यतिभ्रष्टम्' (K. L. S. II. ii. 3) 'तद्धातुनामभागभेदे स्वरसन्ध्यकृते प्रायेण ॥' (ibid II. ii. 4). Viveka objects to such a definition and points out that whatever be the dissolution of the compound 'तद्धातुनामभाग०' it is not possible to include all the cases of yati-bhaṅga under this definition. Therefore, it is suggested here (P. 16, l. 27) that the fore-part of the definition be amended into 'तत्पदमध्यभेदे'. Again it is pointed out that as in this matter vowels play the prime role, the consonants being immaterial, it is better to drop the latter part of the definition of Yati-bhraṣṭa given by Vāmana, and substitute the words 'क्वचित्सन्धावपि'. So the definition of Yati-bhraṣṭa according to Viveka is : 'तत्पदमध्यभेदे क्वचित्संधावपि ।'

[2] The remarks here (P. 17, l. 9) are borrowed by Kalpalatā from K. P. VII : अत्रापराधस्य लवमपीति वाच्यम् । (P. 312).

[3] Vikrama. IV. 29.

[4] This verse is fully quoted in Viveka (P. 17, l. 11).

[5] Viveka borrows this illustration as well as a part of the remarks thereon from Namisādhu's vṛtti on R. K. L. II. 8. According to Namisādhu this is an illustration of Nyūna-pada. Hemacandra does not accept Anabhihita-vācya as a separate doṣa but includes it under Nyūna-pada. (Cf. Hemacandra's K. S. Viveka–P. 203, l. 14). His illustration of Nyūna-pada is 'त्वयि निवद्धरतेः etc,', which is Mammata's ill. of Anabhihita-vācya a distinct doṣa according to him. Probably 'anye' (Viveka P. 17, l. 15) refers to Mammaṭa. The Vivekakāra follows Namisādhu and Hemacandra.

(13) Aśarīra-doṣa (P. 17, l. 18) : Bhoja defines this thus : 'Kriyāpada-vihīnaṁ yad aśarīraṁ tad ucyate'[1], when the predicate (Kriyāpada) is absent this doṣa arises. The ill. is (P. 17, l. 18) :

"selasuā-ruddhaddhaṁ muddhāṇābaddha-bhuddha-sasileham / sīsa-pariṭṭhia-gaṅgaṁ saṅjjhā-paṇaaṁ pamaha-ṇāhaṁ //"[2]

There is no verb[3] here hence it suffers from Aśarīra-doṣa.[4] [The exceptīonal cases where Aśarīra becomes a guṇa are not traceable in Viveka. Probably because this doṣa is not accepted as a doṣa distinct from Nyūna-pada].

(14) Adhika-pada (P. 17, l. 24). : Though there is no direct reference to this doṣa in Viveka, it is certain that it was discussed in Kalpalatā.

When a word is used to convey some meaning which is already brought out by another word in the sentence, it becomes adhika-pada — having a redundant word (pada). This doṣa is mentioned by Rudraṭa[5] but he does not define or illustrate it. However he gives exceptions to it at K. L. VI. 29 to 37.

(i) When some one over-whelmed with joy or fear utters a word more than once such a repetition (punarukta) is faultless.[6]

The ill. is (P. 17, l. 24) :

vada vada jitaḥ sa śatrur na hato jalpaṅś ca tava tavāsmīti / citraṁ citraṁ arodīddhā heti parāhate putre //[7] jaya jaya vairī-vidāraṇa kuru kuru pādaṁ śiraḥsu śatrūṇām / dhig dhik tam ariṁ yas tvām apraṇaman svaṁ vināśayati //[8]

2. (ibid) I. v. 40 (P. 27).
3. Ratneśvara points out that Kriya here implies the principal word. Hence when a sentence is lacking in the important word it is Aśarira. (क्रियेत्युपलक्षणम् प्रधानपदहीनमिति बोधव्यम् । S. K.-P. 28).

7. This verse is quoted in K. P. VII. (P. 361) to illustrate how sometimes Adhikapadatva is a guṇa.
8. R. K. L. VI. 30-31.

(ii) (P. 17, l. 25) Punarukta (Repetition) is faultless under the following conditions :–

(a) when a word is repeated to convey another meaning,

(b) when the synonym of a word is so used,

(c) when a word is repeated to express the continuity of action (vīpsā),

(d) when a word is twice repeated through conventional usage e.g. kala-kala, raṇa-raṇa, vāraṁ-vāram etc.[1]

The ill is (P. 17, l. 27) :–[2]

gaja-rakta-rakta-kesara-bhāraḥ siṁho'tra tanu-śarīro'pi |
diśi diśi kari-bhaṅgaṁ vāraṁ-vāraṁ kharaiḥ kurute ||[3]

(iii) (P. 19, l. 6): When the person addressed does not understand what is spoken to him the repetition of a word or a sentence is faultless.[1]

The ill. is : (P. 19, l. 7)

kiṁ cintayasi sakhe tvaṁ vacmi tvām asmi paśya paśyedam |
nanu kiṁ na paśyasīdṛk paśya sakhe sundaraṁ straiṇam ||[2]

Here 'paśya paśya' is repetition of a word (pada) and the second half contains vākya-punarukta, yet there is no doṣa.

1. यत्पदमर्थेऽन्यस्मिन् तत्पर्यायोऽथवा प्रयुज्येत । वीप्सायां च पुनस्तन्न दुष्टमेतं प्रसिद्धं च ॥ R. K. L. VI. 32.
2. (ibid) VI. 33.
3. (P. 18, l. 7) When a word or its synonym is used in another sense, there is no question of a doṣa. Vīpsā also cannot be otherwise conveyed : thus repetition of a word to convey vīpsā too is not faulty. If a word is repeated through conventional usage there is no question of a doṣa, for if it is not so repeated it would not only be against the generally received idiom, but also consequently fail to convey the desired sense. Thus these are not the cases of Punarukta. Hence the discussion of this exception is redundant and needless. The reply is : Some people think that a multivocal word is competent to express several meanings even though used only once in a given context: according to them the repetition of the same vocable is faulty. According to those who believe that a word conveys 'genus' (Jāti), words used to express continuity (vīpsā) would be cases of gross repetition, hence duṣṭa. The words conventionally repeated often express the same sense even when they are not repeated. In order to meet these arguments the exceptions are given by Rudraṭa. Or it may be said that the objection is valid, but the discussion is nonetheless necessary as it purports to enlighten the less intelligent people who may mistake such repetitions to be the cases of faulty repetition. Hence there is nothing objectionable here.
4. यच्च प्रतिपत्ता वा न प्रतिपद्येत वस्तु सकृदुक्तम् ।
   तत्र पदं वाक्यं वा पुनरुक्तं नैव दोषाय ॥ R. K. L. VI. 34.
5. (ibid) VI. 35.

(iv) (P. 19, l. 11), When a word having some meaning other than 'praise', is used to express 'praise' or when a word and its synonym are used in same sentence to convey 'praise' the poetic blemish of Ādhikya or Paunaruktya, as the case may be, does not arise.[1]

The ill. is : (P. 19, l. 16)

nāsīroddhata-dhūlī-dhavalita-sakalāri-keśa-hastasya |
avilaṅghyo 'yaṁ mahimā tava meru-mahīdharasya ||[2]

[Here in 'keśa-hasta', 'hasta' (meaning hand) is apparently redundant, but it is used to express praise and the compound means 'excellent hair'. In 'Meru-mahīdharasya' the sense of 'mahīdhara' is expressed by 'Meru' yet as the former is used to express praise there is no blemish of repetition].

(v) (P. 19, l. 21) In Arthāntara-saṅkramita-dhvani repetition is faultless. The ill. is : (P. 19, l. 21) tālā jāanti guṇā jālā te sahiehi gheppanti |

raikiraṇāṇuggahiāi honti kamalāi kamalāi ||[3]

Here the repetition of the word 'kamalāi' is faultless.

(15) Ardhaika-gata-vākya-doṣa (P. 19, l. 21) : The illustration is :

masṛṇa-caraṇa-pātaṁ gamyatāṁ bhūḥ sadarbhā viracaya sicayāntaṁ mūrdhni gharmaḥ kaṭhoraḥ | taditi janaka-putrī locanair aśru-pūrṇaiḥ
pathi pathika-vadhūbhir vīkṣitā śikṣitā ca ||[4]

[Here 'tad' meaning 'therefore' is put in the second half of the verse though it is syntactically connected with the first half, hence it is a doṣa].

(16) Abhavan-mata-yoga (P. 19, l. 25) : Where some desired (mata) construction (yogaḥ) is not possible (abhavan), this doṣa arises. [This doṣa arises due to the (i) difference in the case-endings or (ii) non-mention of necessary words, or (iii) absence of expectancy.] The ill. of (i) is : (P. 19, l. 25).

yeṣāṁ tās tridaśebha-dāna-saritaḥ pītāḥ pratāpoṣmabhir
līlā-pāna-bhuvaś ca nandana-tarucchāyāsu yaiḥ kalpitāḥ |

[1] अन्याभिधेयमपि सत्प्रयुज्यते यत्पदं प्रशंसार्थम् ।
तस्य न दोषाय स्यादाधिक्यं पौनरुक्त्यं वा ॥ (ibid) VI. 36.

[2] (ibid) VI. 37.

[3] Mammaṭa quotes this verse to illustrate how Kathita-padatva is a guṇa (K. P.–P. 362).

[4] Mammaṭa quotes this verse as an ill. of Ardhaika-gata-vākya-doṣa.

[5] Quoted in the K. P. VII. (P. 304). The remarks (P. 19, l. 25) are borrowed from K. P. VII. (P. 304). Hemacandra calls it Ananvita–vācya-doṣa. He quotes this very verse. (H. K. S.–P. 223).

Here the pronoun 'yaiḥ' cannot be construed with 'Kṣapācāriṇām' due to difference in case-endings. Hence it gives rise to the doṣa of Abhavan-mata-yoga. The words 'yaiḥ', 'yeṣām' etc. cannot be directly construed with one another with a view to avoid the doṣa, for the rule is : "guṇānāñ ca parārthatvād asaṁbandhaḥ samatvāt syāt",[1] as the subordinate things are subservient to the principal, they cannot have among themselves any independent and mutual relation.

(ii) As no ill. of Abhavan-mata-yoga arising out of the non-mention of necessary words is available, it may be surmised that Kalpalatā included it under Nyūna-pada.

(iii) The ill. is (P. 20, l. 11) :

saṅgrāmāṅgaṇam āgatena bhavatā cāpe somāropite devākarṇaya yena yena sahasā yad yat samāsāditam | kodaṇḍena śarāḥ śarair ariśiras tenāpi bhū-maṇḍalaṁ
tena tvaṁ bhavatā ca kīrtir atulā kīrtyā ca loka-trayam ||[2]

Here the first half of the verse cannot well be construed with the second half.

(17) Garbhitam (P. 20, l. 23) : Rudraṭa's definition of this doṣa is discussed :

yasya praviśed antar vākyaṁ vākyasya saṅgatārthatayā |
tad garbhitam iti gamayen nijam arthaṁ kaṣṭa-kalpanayā ||[3]

When a sentence related in import to another longer sentence, creeps into the latter and thus impedes the meaning of that sentence, the Garbhita-doṣa arises. So long as the sentence which has crept in is not separated, the other sentence does not clearly express its meaning. The ill. of this doṣa is not traceable in Viveka.[4]

(P. 20, l. 26) Under certain circumstances Garbhita becomes a guṇa, according to Bhoja :

vākyāntara-sagarbhaṁ yad vākyaṁ tad vākya-garbhitam |
rasāntara-tiraskāre tad iṣṭam neṣṭaṁ anyathā ||[5]

When this doṣa is concealed by virtue of some other pertinent sentiment, it is a guṇa : otherwise not. This ill. of the exception is not traceable in Viveka.[6]

[1] The ill. of this Mimāṅsā-sūtra is borrowed by Viveka from the Śābarabhāṣya on that sūtra.

[2] Obviously Kalpalatā borrows from K. P. VII. The remarks here (P. 20, l. 13) are borrowed from K. P. : 'अत्राऽऽकर्णनक्रियाकर्मत्वे कोदण्डं शरानित्यादि, वाक्यार्थस्य कर्मत्वे कोदण्डः शरा इति प्राप्तम् ।' K. P. VII. Pp. 306–307.

[3] R. K. L. VI. 43.

[4] Rudraṭa gives it (vide R. K. L. VI. 44).

[5] S. K. I. 119. Here the first line contains the definition of Garbhita-doṣa.

[6] vide S. K. I. v. 166, Hemacandra borrows this ill. vide H. K. S. (P. 216).

(18) Bhagna-prakramatva (P. 20, l. 26) : When the symmetry of expression or construction, is broken this doṣa arises. This break in symmetry may occur in many ways. In the following ill. (P. 20. l. 26) it is due to break in the symmetry of expression :

nāthe niśayā niyater niyogād astaṁ gate hanta niśā'pi yātā / kulāṅganānāṁ hi daśānurūpaṁ
nātaḥ paraṁ bhadrataraṁ samasti ||

Here the doṣa could have been avoided by having 'gatā niśā'pi'.

In the following verse the break of expression consists in the irregular use of terminations : (P. 21, l. 10).

yaśo 'dhigantuṁ sukha-lipsayā vā manuṣya-saṅkhyām ativartituṁ vā / nirutsukānām abhiyogabhājāṁ
samutsukevāṅkam upaiti siddhiḥ ||[1]

Here there would be no doṣa if an infinitive were to replace sukha-lipsayā, thus : sukham īhitum (vā). If this were not so the option expressed here by the adverb 'vā' would not be applicable to 'sukha-lipsā' as that compound does not belong to the same category as the infinitives.

In the following ill. the symmetry is broken due to irregular use of number.[2] (P. 21, l. 19).

kācit kīrṇā, rajobhir divam anuvidadhau manda-vaktrendu-lakṣmīr ashrīkāḥ kāścid antar diśa iva dadhire dāham udbhrānta-satvāḥ /

aparā bhūmivat-kampamānāḥ prasthāne pārthivānām aśivam iti

1. Both these illustrations are borrowed together with the remarks thereon by Kalpalatā as well as by Mammaṭa (K. P. VII. P. 317 & 318) from Vyakti-viveka of Rājānaka Mahima Bhaṭṭa (vide V. V. P. 245). Hemacandra also borrows the second verse together with the remarks (vide H. K. S.-P. 218). Kalpalatā-Viveka borrows wholesale from the Vyakti-viveka. Cf. Viveka (P. 20, l. 26 to P. 21, l. 18) and Vyakti-viveka (Pp. 245, 246, 250 & 251).
2. This ill. as well as the remarks thereon is borrowed from the K. P. VII, :
'अत्र वचनस्य। काश्चित्कीर्णा रजोभिर्दिवमनुविदधुर्मन्दवक्त्रेन्दुशोभा निःश्रीका इति, कम्पमाना इत्यत्र कम्पमापुरिति च पठनीयम् ।' (P. 321).
3. This ill. together with the comments thereon is borrowed by Mammaṭa from V. V. (vide Pp. 257–258).

Here there is singular in the first quarter and plural in the remaining quarters, which naturally breaks the symmetry. Moreover, all the verbs are in Perfect tense, whereas 'kampamānāḥ' is a Present Participle (suggesting a subordinate action on account of the śānac), which rudely interrupts the uniformity and results in a doṣa.

(19) Akrama (P. 27, l. 23) : Where there is no (avidyamāno) order (krama) it is Akrama. When a word, which should be mentioned after some particular word, is mentioned elsewhere this doṣa arises. Viveka discusses how this doṣa differs from Asthānastha-pada-doṣa. Both these doṣas arise when a pada is wrongly placed, but in Akrama the emphasis lies on the order and not on its particular place only.

(20) Asthānastha-pada (P. 21 l. 24) : This doṣa consists in the wrong placing of a particular word (pada), but the order is not material, if the wrongly placed word comes anywhere else either before or after, the doṣa can be avoided. The ill. is (P. 21, l. 24) :

priyeṇa saṁgrathya vipakṣa-sannidhau niveśitaṁ vakṣasi pīvara-stane | srajaṁ na kācid vijahau jalāvilāṁ
vasanti hi premṇi guṇā na vastuni ||[1]

Here in the last line 'na' before 'kecit' is wrongly placed, it fails to convey the sense it is expected to convey; for the expression means, 'no one gave up' instead of meaning 'only one (woman) did not give up her garland'. It does not matter if it is : 'kācin na vijahau' or 'na vijahau kācit', only 'na' should not immediately precede 'kācit'. Thus it differs from Akrama where order is very material.

The other ill. (P. 21, l 25) of Asthānastha-pada is :

lagnaḥ keli-kaca-graha-ślatha-jaṭā-lambena nidrāntare
mudrāṅkaḥ śitikandharendu-śakalenāntaḥ kapola-sthalam |
Pārvatyā nakha-lakṣma-śaṅkita-sakhī-narma-smita-hrītayā pronmṛṣṭaḥ kara-pallavena kuṭilātāmra-cchaviḥ pātu vaḥ ||[2]

Here 'kuṭilātāmra' should precede 'nakha-lakṣma' etc. hence the doṣa is Asthānastha-pada.

The ill. of Akrama (P. 22, l. 4) :

dvayaṁ gataṁ samprati śocanīyatāṁ
samāgama-prārthanayā Kapālinaḥ |

[1] Kirāta. VII. 37.

[2] This is ill. of अस्थानस्थपद in K. P. VII. (P. 313).

kalā ca sā kāntimatī kalāvataḥ tvam asya lokasya ca netra-kaumudī //[1]

Here 'ca' in the last quarter should come immediately after 'tvam'.

The other ill. of Akrama is (P. 22, l. 9):

lagnaṁ rāgāvṛtāṅgyā sudṛḍhaṁ iha yayaivāsi yaṣṭyārikaṇṭhe mātaṅgānāṁ apīhopari parapuruṣair yā ca dṛṣṭā patantī / tatsakto 'yaṁ na kiñcid gaṇayati viditaṁ te 'stu tenāsmi dattā bhṛtyebhyaḥ śrīniyogād gaditum iva gatety ambudhiṁ yasya kīrtiḥ //[2]

Here there would be no doṣa if it were 'iti śrīniyogāt'[3].

(21) Amata-parārtha (P. 22, l. 25): When the other meaning is antagonistic to the principal import, it is Amata-parārtha. Thus here there is a contradictory other sense which does not help the chief Rasa develop.

The ill. is: (P. 22, l. 25).

Rāma-manmatha-śareṇa tāḍitā duḥsahena hṛdaye niśācarī / gandhavad rudhira-candanokṣitā jīviteśa-vasatiṁ jagāma sā // Raghu. XI. 20.

Here the other sense suggests Erotic sentiment which is contrary to the principal Rasa[4] delineated here.

1. This verse is borrowed together with the comments thereon by Kalpalatā (P. 22, l. 4) as well as by Hemacandra (vide H. K. S.-P. 210) from the Kāvya-prakāśa (VII. P. 323). According to Hemacandra here the doṣa is Asthānastha-pada; according to Mammaṭa it is Akrama. The words in the K. P. are: त्वंशब्दादनन्तरं चकारो युक्तः (K. P. P. 327). The remarks in the Viveka (P. 22, l. 4 to l. 8) are borrowed from the Kāvyānuśasana Viveka of Hemacandra (vide H. K. S. V.-P. 210, l. 17 ff.).
2. This verse is quoted by Mammaṭa as an ill. of several doṣas inter alia of Akrama. It seems that according to Kalpalatā it is Akrama—as it is given after the other ill. of that doṣa, According to Hemacandra this is the ill. of Asthānastha-pada, for he includes Akrama-vākya-doṣa under that doṣa (vide H. V. P. 22 l. 26).
3. The verse together with the comments is borrowed by the Kalpalatā and Hemacandra (H. K. S. P. 211) from the Kāvya-prakāśa (vide K. P. 324.). The verses (P. 22, l. 10 to l. 24) are borrowed from the Vyakti-viveka (V. V. II, P. 286), The first four of these are borrowed by Hemacandra (vide H. K.S.V. P. 211, ll. 6to14).
4. The verse under discussion here (P. 22, l. 25) is undoubtedly this; it is also quoted by Mammaṭa (vide K. P. VII—P. 324). The words 'प्रकृते रसे' are also borrowed from the K. P.: 'अत्र प्रकृते रसे विरुद्धस्य रसस्य शृंगारस्य व्यञ्जकोऽपरोऽर्थः ।' (K. P.-P. 324). There seems to be some difference of opinion as regards the principal Rasa of this verse. According to Hemacandra, who quotes this verse as an ill. of a Rasa-doṣa, it is Karuṇa (vide H. K. S. P. 168). According to Māṇikyacandra also it is Karuṇa (vide K. P. S-P. 156). According to Bhaṭṭagopāla it is Vīra (vide K. P. S. C-P. 90). According to Vidyā-Cakravarti and the Viveka-kāra it is Bībhatsa (vide K. P. Sampradāya-prakāśinī P. 99. and Viveka P. 22, l. 25).

(22) Apada (P. 22, l. 25): Bhoja's definition which is quoted by Kalpalatā is: Vibhinna-prakṛtisthādi padayukty-apadaṁ viduḥ /[1]

According to Bhoja Padas are sixfold: Prakṛtistha, Komala, Kaṭhora, Grāmya, Nāgara and Upanāgara. Prakṛtistha is a pada which has long vowels or conjunct consonants; Komala has either one long vowel or none; Kaṭhora has nasals, visarga, long vowels or conjunct consonants; Grāmya is commonly popular (i. e. all deśya words like hasta, vivāha, bhaginī etc., used in Sanskrit); Nāgara is the reverse of Grāmya; Upanāgara stands midway between the last two, it is neither very popular nor merely popular among the erudites. When these various types of padas are not properly employed the Apada-doṣa arises.

The ill, is (p. 23, l. 7):

āujjhia piṭṭiae jaha kakkuli ṇāma majjha bhattāle / pekkhantaha lāulakaṇṇiāha hā kassa kandemi //[2]

The wife of a servant, a rustic, utters these words hence the mixture of the padas of various types results in Apada doṣa.

(P. 23, l. 13) Under certain conditions Apada becomes a guṇa e.g. in Bhāṣā-citra. Bhoja puts it thus[4]:

prakṛtisthādibhedena grāmyādibhiṛ aṭhāpi yā / apadam tasya cānujñā bhāṣā-citre[5] vidhīyate //

The ill. is (P. 23, l. 14):

hā to jo jjaladeu, naiva Madanaḥ sākṣād ayaṁ bhūtale tā kiṁ disai saccamā, hatavapuḥ Kāmaḥ kila śrūyate / ai dūe kialeu, Bhūta-patinā Gaurī-vivāhotsave eseṅ sacca ji bollu, hasta-kaṭakaḥ kiṁ darpaṇenekṣyate //

Here there is an interesting conversation between a rustic villager and a refined citizen. The Sanskrit words spoken by the villager are all Grāmya except 'vapuḥ' which is upanāgara; the answers given by the citizen contain Grāmya (like hasta, vivāha and Gauri), Nāgara (like Bhūta-pati) and Upanāgara words (the rest). So there is a mixture of different types of words, which lends an additional charm to the verse[1] as the interlocutors belong to different stations in life.

[3] The words at (P. 23, l. 12) are borrowed by the Kalpalatā from the S. K. of Bhoja:
तदेतत् प्रकृतिस्थकोमलकठोराणां नागरोपनागराणां ग्राम्याणां वा पदानामयुतेरपदम् ।
S. K. P. 22.

[4] S. K. I. 118.

[5] Ratneśvara explains भाषाचित्र thus: Citra means surprise, and what excites surprise is also Citra. When there is a mixture of various dialects necessitated by propriety and the station of the persons speaking, the doṣa of Apada does not arise. On the contrary such a usage adds to the charm and is therefore a guṇa. For like a picture with many colours or a piece of cloth woven with multicoloured yarn the Bhāṣā-citra too is very attractive.

(23) Bhinna-liṅga (P. 23, l. 21) : Bhoja defines it thus :

'yatropamā bhinna-liṅgā bhinna-liṅgaṁ tad ucyate' |[2]

When in a simile (upamā) the gender of the upamāna and the upameya is not the same this doṣa arises.[3] The ill. is: (P. 23, l. 21)

vāpīva vimalaṁ vyoma hansīva dhavalaḥ śaśī |
śaśilekheva hanso 'yaṁ hansālir iva te yaśaḥ ||[4]

Under certain circumstances the difference in gender is not a doṣa in an upamā.[5]

The ill. is (P. 23, l. 21) :

yasya trivarga-śūnyāni dināny āyānti yānti ca |
sa lohakāra-bhastreva śvasann api na jīvati ||[6]

According to Bhoja there is no doṣa here as the upamāna has no other synonym. But Viveka finds fault with it (P. 23, l. 23), for the common property 'śvasan' (masculine) cannot be happily construed with the Upamāna 'lohakāra-bhastrā' which is feminine.

Sometimes Bhinna-vacana also is faultless. The ill. (P, 23, l. 25) is :

prājya-prabhāvaḥ prabhavo dharmasyāsta-rajastamāḥ |
muktātmā naḥ śivaṁ Nemīr anye 'pi dadatāṁ jināḥ ||[7]

Here there is difference in the number; 'anye' is plural while 'Nemiḥ' is singular yet this difference in number in the upamāna and upameya is converted into a guṇa by virtue of the punning verb (dadatām)[8]. This verse is an ill. of Upamā in the same way as:

[8] The comments on this verse (प्राज्यप्रभाव etc.) are borrowed by Kalpalatā from Bhoja : अत्र 'नेमिरन्येऽपि इति...कोमलापाटलौ...यत्र द्वयोः सदृशयोरभिधानम् स श्लेषः...यत्र सदृशात्सदृशप्रतिपत्तिस्तदुपमानम् etc । S. K. I comments on v. 163. (P. 116-117.)

komalāpāṭalau tanvi pallavaś cādharaś ca te //[1] is (P. 24, l. 1). The exception to Hīnopamā doṣa is discussed by Bhoja :

yatropamāna-dharmāḥ syur nopameyena sammitāḥ] taddhīnopamam ity āhus tat prasiddhau na duṣyati //

When the epithets of the upameya are more in number than those of the upamāna, the Upamā is defective and is called Hīnopamā, but this ceases to be a blemish when the upamāna is welknown.[2]

(P. 24, l. 2) In the same may, Adhikopama is some time not a doṣa. When the epithets of the upamāna are more in number than those of the upameya the Adhikopamādoṣa arises. But sometimes it is not a doṣa.

krameṇānena kṛtibhir eṣṭavyam adhikopamam / viśeṣas tūpameyāṅgam anumānāt pratīyate //[3]

The ill. is not traceable in Viveka,[4]

(24) Arītimad (P. 24, l. 6) : When due to the absence of some guṇa a poem offends against the rīti (style) it is called Arītimad[5]. It is of three types : Śabda-pradhāna, Artha-pradhāna and Ubhaya-pradhāna. In the former two, sound and sense are respectively predominant while in the last both are important. Those Arītimad poems which are contrary to the guṇa, Śleṣa, Samatā or Saukumārya are Śabda-pradhāna, those which offend against the guṇa, Kānti, Prasāda or Artha-vyakti are Artha-pradhāna and those that offend against the guṇa Ojas, Mādhurya or Audārya are Ubhaya-pradhāna. Thus Arītimad is of nine types[6]. Śithila (looseness), Viṣama (unevenness), Kaṭhora (harshness), Aprasanna (Abstruse), Neyārtha (Ellipsis) Grāmya (Unrefined), Asamasta (Compoundless), Anirvyūḍha (Unfinished) and Analaṁkāra (dull or unembellished).

[1] Viveka (P. 23, l. 23).

[2] The ill. of this is not traceable in Viveka. Bhoja gives it at S. K. I. v. 165 (P. 118). It is borrowed from B K. L. II. 41. Is it possible that Bhāmaha here criticises those who think this verse to be Hīnopamā ? For he thinks that complete similarity is not possible. Even the ill. at B. K. L. I. 58 (Upamānādhikya according to K. P.–vide P. 592) is not accepted by Bhāmaha, and there too he refers to B. K. L. I. 43 and B. K. L. I. 60. The Viveka does not discuss the ills. here probably because they are dealt with in Ch. IV under Upamā-doṣas.

[3] S. K. I. 122.

[4] Bhoja S. K. I. v. 165 (P. 119) borrows it from B. K. L. I. 58.

[5] This doṣa is given by Boja (vide S. K. I. 28, 29). The styles, as Viveka (P. 24, l. 6) points out are वैदर्भी, गौडी and पाञ्चाली.

[6] All these doṣas viz Śithila etc. are discussed by Daṇḍi in his Kāvyādarśa not as doṣas but as the reversals of the ten guṇas which according to him are vitally essential to the Vaidarbha style (vide K. D. I. 40–92.)

(i) Sithila is the reverse of śleṣa (Cohesion).[1] The ill. is (P. 24, l. 8) : ālīyaṁ mālatī-mālā lōlāli-kalilā manaḥ /[2].

(ii) Viṣama is the reverse of Samatā (Evenness).[3] (P. 24, l. 9) The ill. is not traceable in the Viveka[4]

(iii) The Kaṭhora type of Arītimad is not traceable in Viveka[5] .

(iv) The reverse of Prasāda (Perspicuity) is Aprasanna[6] (P. 24, l. 10).

The ill. (P. 24, l. 11) is :—

anaṅgakam alaṁcakre mayamānā marālikā / yasyānaty arjunābjanma sadṛkṣāṅko valakṣaguḥ //[7]

(v) Neyārtha is not traceable.[8]

(vi) The reverse of Kānti (grace) is Grāmya (P. 24, l. 10).[9]

The ill. is :

virahe te viṣīdantaṁ niṣīdantaṁ tavāntike /
kanye kāmayamānaṁ tvāṁ tvaṁ na kāmayase katham //[10]

(vii) The reverse of Ojas (floridity) is Asamasta[11] (P. 24, l. 12).

The ill. is :

smaraḥ kharaḥ khalaḥ kāntaḥ kāyaḥ kopadhanaḥ kṛśah /
cyuto māno 'dhiko rāgo moho jāto 'savo gatāḥ //[12]

(viii) The reverse of Mādhurya (Sweetness) is Anīrvyūḍha. The ill. is (P. 24, l. 13) :—

nakhināñ ca nadīnāñ ca śṛṅgiṇām śastrapāṇinām / viśvāso naiva kartavyaḥ, strīṣu raja-kuleṣu ca //[14]

(ix) The reverse of Audārya (Pregnant Construction) is Analaṁkāra[15] । The ill. is (P. 24, l. 14) :—

It should be noted that Viparyaya of Samādhi is not contemplated.[2] (P. 24, l. 16) Exceptions to Arītimad are given :

(i) Śithila (looseness) is a guṇa in Gauḍa style (P. 24, l. 16).[3] śliṣṭam aspṛṣṭa-śaithilyaṁ śithilaṁ tad viparyayaḥ / gauḍīyair iṣyate tat tu bandha-prāśastya-gauravāt //[4]

The ill. is not traceable in the Viveka[5].

(ii) Vaiṣamya as a guṇa is not traceable[6].

(iii) Kaṭhora is not a doṣa in the Gauḍa style :

kaṭhoram api badhnanti dīptam ity apare punaḥ / teṣāṁ matena tasyāpi dūṣaṇaṁ naiva vidyate //[7]

The ill. is not traceable in the Viveka[8].

(iv) Aprasanna cannot be traced in the Viveka. Bhoja defines it thus :

avidvad-aṅganā-bāla-prasiddhārthaṁ prasādavat / viparyayo 'syāprasannaṁ citrādau tan na duṣyati //[9]

The ill. also is not traceable in the Viveka[10].

(v) Neyārtha is not a doṣa when what is neya (understood) is too welknown.[11] The ill. is (P. 24, l. 17) : —

mā bhavantam analaḥ pavano vā, vāraṇo madakalaḥ paraśur vā / vāhinī-jalabharaḥ kuliśaṁ vā svastite'stu latayā saha vṛkṣa //[12]

Here verbs like 'dahatu' etc are too welknown not to be inferrable.

[1] S. K. I. v. 49 (P. 35).

[2] The absence or reversal of Samādhi would deprive the poem of its right to poetry. Hence the reverse of Samādhi is not even contemplated. For this very reason Mammaṭa denies it the status of a distinct Guṇa :
'अर्थस्यायोनेरन्यच्छायायोनेर्वा यदि न भवति दर्शन तत्कथं काव्यम्, इत्यर्थदृष्टिरूपः समाधिरपि न गुणः ।' K. P. VIII. P. 398. Mammaṭa has Vāmana's def. of समाधि in view.

(vi) Grāmya is not a doṣa when the statement is couched in a decent phraseolgy.[1] The ill. is (P. 24, l. 18): kāmaṁ Kandarpa etc.[2]

(vii) Asamasta is not a doṣa in exciting Rasas when the sense produces floridity.[3]

(viii) Anirvyūḍha is not a doṣa when due to the change in the Rasa, the style is changed (P. 24, l. 19):

samastam asamastaṁ vā na nirvahati yad vacaḥ / tad anirvyūḍham asyāpi na doṣaḥ kvāpi tad yathā //[4]

kim artham utkampita-pīvarastana-dvayaṁ tvayā lupta-vilāsam āsyate //[5]

(ix) Analaṁkāra is not a doṣa, when an expression is calculated to serve as a connecting link between a former and a later statement. This is not traceable in Viveka.

(III) Artha-doṣas :

The following Artha-doṣas are treated in this sub-section:

(1) Apuṣṭārtha (p. 24, l. 23); Whatever import is not useful to a particular context is Apuṣṭa. The ill. is (p. 24, l. 23):

ativitata-gagana-saraṇi-prasaraṇa-parimukta-viśramānandaḥ / marud-ullāsita-saurbha-kamalākara-hāsakṛd ravir jayati //

Here even if the epithets 'ativitata' and the like were not used the sense would have been complete hence they are apuṣṭa, but neither asaṁgata (inconsistent) nor punarukta (repetition).

विदग्धोक्तौ तु तस्याहुर्गुणवत्त्वं मनीषिणः ॥ S. K. I. 131.

[2] The ill. is, like most of the illustrations of Arītimad, borrowed from Daṇḍī (vide K. D. I. 64.) : कामं कन्दर्पचाण्डालो मयि वामाक्षि निर्दयः । त्वयि निर्मत्सरो दिष्ट्या सोऽयमस्मास्वनुग्रहः ॥ S. K. I. v. 173 (P. 25).

[3] This is not traceable in Viveka; vide S. K. I. 132. The ill. is from Veṇisaṁhāra III. 27. (vide S. K. I. v. 174 (P. 126).

[4] S. R I. 133.

[5] Here in the first half Sṛṅgāra is the Rasa hence there is no compound but in the second half the emotion of anger is delineated hence the style is compounded, yet it adds to the beauty of the verse. Kalpalatā (vide Viveka P. 24, l. 20) here. borrows the remarks on this verse from the S. K. I.–P. 126 :
' अत्रासमस्तरीत्यनिर्वाहादनिर्व्यूढत्वेऽपि रसान्तरपरिग्रहेण रीत्यन्तरपरिग्रहाद्गुणत्वम् । '

[6] Vide S. K. I. 134 (for definition). The ill. is given at S. K. I. v. 176. (P. 127).

Viveka remarks that 'na tvasaṁgataḥ'[1] is calculated to refute Rudraṭa who gives the name Asaṁbaddha[2] to this doṣa. He defines it thus (p. 24, l. 24.) :

'prakrāntānupayogi prāpto yas tāt kramād asaṁbaddhaḥ'

Some import which comes in its due order in a given context is, nevertheless, impertinent there is, therefore, called Asaṁbaddha (inconsistent). The ill. is (p. 24, l. 27):

'gatā te kīrtir bahuphenaṁ jaladhim ullaṅghya' /

Here 'bahuphenatva' (excessive foaminess) is not pertinent to the context, hence it is Asaṁbaddha according to Rudraṭa, which is the same as Mammaṭa's Apuṣṭārtha and Vāmana's Ekārtha.

Tadvān (p. 25 l. 1): When certain quality and so on, which though invariably connected with something are separately mentioned as its attributes, merely to complete the metre, the Tadvān doṣa arises.[4] The ill. of this doṣa is not traceable[5]. According to Mammaṭa this also is Apuṣṭārtha.

(2) Kaṣṭārtha (p. 25 l. 2.)[6]: When the meaning is apprehended after great difficulty it is Kaṣṭārtha. The ill is :

sadā madhye yāsām iyam amṛta-niḥsyanda-surasā sarasvaty-uddāmā vahati bahu-mārgā parimalam / prasādaṁ tā etā ghana-paricitāḥ kena mahatām mahākāvya-vyomni sphurita-madhurā yāntu rucayaḥ //[7]

(3) Vyartha (p. 25. l. 7)[8]: Bhāmaha defines it thus[9]: Viruddhārthaṁ matam vyartham/ whatever has a self-contradictory sense is vyartha. Viruddha

(self-contradictory) is explained thus : 'viruddhaṁ tūpadiśyate / pūrvāparārtha-vyāghātād viparyaya-karam/' self-contradictory statement is that wherein there is inconsistency between the former and later imports. The ill. is (p. 25 l. 7):

upāsita-gurutvāt tvaṁ vijitendriya-śatruṣu / śreyaso vinayādhānam adhunā "tiṣṭha kevalam// [1]

There is contradition between the two halves of this verse.

(P. 26 l. 25) Under certain circumstances vyartha is not a doṣa.

When someone makes a competely incoherent statement with a view to suggest the utter incoherent attitude of someone else, such a statement is free from blemish.[2]

The ill. is (p. 26 l. 1):

kimidam asaṅgatam asminn ādāv anyat tathā'nyad ante ca / yatnenoptā māṣāḥ sphuṭam ete kodravā jatāḥ / 1

In the second line above there is inconsitency, for when you sow māṣas you do not reap kodravas. But this inconsitency is not a blemish as this is spoken to point out the utter inconsistency in someone's speech.

(P. 26, l. 9) Vyartha : Vāmana defines it thus: 'vyāhata-pūrvottarārthaṁ vyartham /' [4] A statement, wherein the purports of the earlier and the later part are mutually contradictory, is vyarha. [5]

The ill. is (P. 26, l. 9):

adyāpi smarati rasālasaṁ mano me mugdhāyāḥ smara-caturāṇi ceṣṭitāni / [6]

Here 'mugdhā and smara-caturāṇi' are inconsistent, for a mugdhā (a coy girl) cannot be an adept in the art of love-making.

Viveka takes exception to this illustration on the ground that 'mugdhā' here means an attractive lady (manoharā), hence its use does not involve contradiction. Therefore another ill. is suggested : (P. 25, l. 10) 'vapur-anupamaṁ nābher.ūrdhvaṁ vidhāya mṛgīdṛśo etc,' where there is contradiction between the first half and the second.

(4) Ekārtha (P. 26 l. 14) Vāmana defines it thus :[7] 'uktārtha-padam ekā- rtham/' When words, whose import is already conveyed by some other words, are employed in a statement, this doṣa arises.

(P. 26, l. 14) Vāmana gives certain exceptional [1] cases when under certain conditions uktārtha does not involve any doṣa.

When, for instance, a substantive, whose sense is already conveyed by some other word in a sentence, is used to help apprehend the sense of its adjective, there is no doṣa.[2]

The ill. is: jagāda madhurāṁ vācaṁ viśadākṣara–śālinīm/ [3] Here the sense of the substantive 'vācam' is conveyed by the verb 'jagāda', it would thus be a repetition. But the word vācam, according to Vāmana, is used here to help apprehend the sense of the adjective 'viśadākṣara-śālinim' hence the use is faultless.

Mammaṭa does not accept this view. He says that it is not proper to indulge in such new usages, though we may somehow account for the existing ones. The sense of the adjective can even be brought out by an adverb [5] and thus the tautology can be avoided.[6]

According to Mammaṭa, jagāda madhurām etc. is quite unsupportable. He, therefore, suggests another illustration if at all the sūtra is to be justified. The ill. is (26, l. 15) caraṇatra–paritrāṇa etc. (quoted in extenso in fn. 4 to P. 47).

Ekārtha (P. 26, l. 18): According to Bhāmaha this is of two types: Śabda-punarukta and Artha-punarukta. The former variety is too gross to be Even then Rudraṭaś Asambaddha is Ekārtha of Vāmana,

6. According to Viveka this can be avoided if we say: (p. 26 l. 14)
"मधुरं विशदाक्षरशालि च जगाद" elaborated hence he does not illustrate it.[1] But under exceptional circumstances,[2] (P. 26, l. 19) where, for example, through fear, grief or anger as well as through joy or surprise some one repeats certain words, Punarukta is not a doṣa.[3]

The exceptions to Punarukta[4] are illustrated (P. 26, l. 22):

vidīrṇābhimukhārāti-karāle saṅgarāntare / dhanurjyā-kiṇa-cinhena doṣṇā visphurati tava // [5]

Here 'dhanuḥ' (bow) is used to suggest that the bow was strung, hence it is not Ekārtha.

(P. 26, l. 26) dolāvilāseṣu vilāsinīnāṁ karṇāvtaṁsā kalayanti rūpam / V. K. L. S. II. ii. 14. (P. 26).

Here 'avataṁsa' means 'ear ornament'. 'Karṇa' would be redundant but is used to denote that the ornament is already put on.

(P. 27, l. 1).

prāṇeśvara–pariṣvaṅga–vibhrama–pratipattibhiḥ /
muktāhāreṇa lasatā hasatīva stana-dvayam // [6]

The sense of 'muktā' is already conveyed by 'hāra' (pearl necklace) yet the former is used here to suggest that the necklace had no other jewel except pearls in it.

(P. 27, l. 6) prāyaśaḥ puṣpa-maleva kanyā sā kaṁ na lobhayet //' [7]

The word mālā (garland) expresses the sense of 'puṣpa' which is used here to denote the sense of excellence.

(P. 27, l. 8) 'tyaja kari–kalabha tvaṁ prītibandhaṁ kariṇyāḥ /' [8]

'kalabha' (young elephant) is sufficient to express the sense of 'karī' (elephant) also, yet the latter is mentioned to denote the sense of 'excellent or powerful elephant' but when this sense of excellence is not contemplated' merely 'kalabha' is used as in (P. 26, l. 11):

Tonsure should be performed after knowing the auspicious constellation and consulting an astrologer. Here the order is reversed. Hence Apakrama.

(kula), caste or sex (jāti) learning (vidyā), wealth (vitta), age (vayaḥ) station or position (sthāna) and character, grāmya doṣa arises.[1]

In order to clarify this, Viveka quotes Rudraṭa (P. 28, l. 12): Forward behaviour in newly married girls (kanyā)[2], guilelessness and bashfulness in harlots, graceful conquetry in rustic women, or deceitfulness in ladies of noble birth[3], should be considered 'grāmya' as that is against propriety and is contrary to what we see[4].

(P. 29, l. 2) Bearing this in mind the wise should strive with great effort to avoid grāmya doṣa as it is not possible to know it merely by these illustrations.[5]

(7) Apahetu (P. 29, l. 10) When somehow or other one thing becomes the cause of something else and then the former is contradicted by a subsequent powerful reasoning (yukti) it is called apa-hetu.[6]

The ill. is (P. 29, l. 10):

tava digvijayārambhe bala-dhūlī-bahala-toya-janiteṣu / gagana-sthaleṣu bhānoś cakram abhūd ratha-bharābhijñam //[7]

The march of an army may cause a thick cloud of dust appearing like of a piece of land in the sky but such a piece cannot remain suspended without support, thus the former statement is contradicted by a subsequent reasoning. It is Apahetu.

(8) Ayuktimat (P. 29, l. 14): This doṣa is discussed by Bhāmaha, who is quoted by Kalpalatā:

[2] According to Namisādhu 'kanyā' means ' a newly married girl ' for she too is a virgin so long as the marriage has not consummated.

[3] The ills. of the proper behaviour of different types of women are given in Viveka, some of them are borrowed from the Ṭippaṇa of Nami.

When a cloud, a breeze or the moon which are speechless; or a bee, a hārita (pigeon), a cakravāka (ruddy goose), or a śuka (parrot) which have inarticulate speech are described as messengers of people living in distant places the Ayuktimat doṣa arises, as it is against propriety[1].

(P. 29, l. 15) But if someone speaks irrelevantly like a mad man due to extreme longing, such descriptions (e. g. of a cloud as a messenger) do not involve a doṣa.[2] Even the highly enlightened often make use of such motifs.[3]

(9) Deśa-kālā-divirodhi[4]

(i) Deśa-virodhi: (P. 29; 1, 17): When something produced in a particular place or country is not so described, or when a thing not produced somewhere is described otherwise in a poem, the Deśa-virodhi-doṣa arises.[5]

The ill. is not traceable in Viveka.

Malaya mountain is famous for sandal trees but never for black aloe or devadaru trees, which are found in the Himalayas hence to describe Malaya as having devadāru trees is Deśa-virodhi.[6]

(ii) Kāla-virodhi (P. 29, l. 19): For the sake of convinience time is divided into six seasons, years, yugas etc. Poetical descriptions should generally conform to these traditional divisions otherwise they may be vitiated under certain circumstances. The doṣa involved is Kāla-virodhi-doṣa. [7]

[3] Obviously Bhāmaha has 'Meghadūta' in view while he included this proviso to his rule. (For contrary opinion vide T. Ganpati Śāstri, Intro. to स्वप्नवासवदत्तम् P. 7,) Viveka rightly remarks (P. 29, l. 16) ' यदि पुनरनित्यदोषत्वमस्य नेष्यते तदा लक्ष्यव्याघात इति । etc.

[4] The treatment of this doṣa is borrowed here from Bhāmaha's Kāvyālaṁkāra. (IV. 29. ff). From the word स्वभावात् (P. 29. l. 17) a new para should begin.

When a thing found in a particular season only, is described as available in some other, the Kāla-virodhi doṣa arises.[1] The ill. of this doṣa too is not traceable in Viveka. Bhāmaha gives it thus:

udūḍha-śiśirāsārān prāvṛseṇyān nabhasvataḥ / phullāḥ surabhayantīme cūtāḥ kānana-śobhinaḥ //[2]

The mango trees do not generally blossom in monsoon hence this verse contains Kāla-virodhi-dosa.

(iii) Loka-virodhi (P. 29, l. 22) : When the working of this mobile and immobile world is described in a manner different from what is generally known and accepted, this doṣa arises. Bhāmaha defines it thus (P. 29, l. 21) :

sthāsnu-jaṅgama--bhedena lokaṁ tatvavido viduḥ /
sa ca tad vyavahāro'tra tad-virodha-karam (yathā) //[3]

This world is divided into mobile (jaṅgama) and immobile (sthāsnu). 'World' (loka) here stands for the experience of the working of this two-fold world. Whatever is contrary to this experience is Loka-viruddha. The ill. cannot be traced in Viveka. Bhāmaha gives these ills :

tesāṁ kaṭa-taṭa-bhraṣṭair gajānāṁ mada-bindubhiḥ / prāvartata nadī ghorā hasty-aśva-ratha-vāhinī //[4]

The river formed by the ichor swept away the elephants, the horses and the army. This is contrary to wordly experience, hence defective.

The other ill. (P. 29, l. 23):

dhāvatāṁ sainya-vāhānāṁ phena-vāri mukhāc cyutam / cakāra jānudaghnāpān pratidiṅ-mukham adhvanaḥ // [5]

The froth dribbling from the mouths of the chargers covered the directions all round with knee-deep waters. This is impossible and against our wordly experience, hence dusṭa.[6]

---

[1] It should be noted that descriptions which do not conform to these rules regarding Kāla Deṣa, etc, would be faultless if they are backed up by poetical convention. Poetical convention (Kavi-samaya, defined thus : "अशास्त्रीयमलौकिकं च परम्परायातं यमर्थमुपनिवध्नन्ति कवयः स कविसमयः । का. मी. XIV P. 78,) discussed by Rajaśekhara in his Kāvya-mīmaṁsā has its root in the Deśādī-virodhi-doṣa. This is confimed by Rajaśekhara who says, "तत्परिहार्यं यत्नात्तदुदाहृतयस्तु दोषेषु ।". Thus poetic convention as a technical subject was in its infancy in Bhāmaha's time, though its idea had not then crystallised nor was it technically called by that name. Rudraṭa is very near Rajaśekhara when he prescribes approval of an otherwise deśādi-duṣṭa peom, if it is upheld by the traditions of master poets (R. K. L. VIII. 8).

[2] B. K. L. IV. 32.

[3] (ibid) IV. 36.

[4] (ibid) IV. 37.

[5] (ibid) IV 38.

[6] According to Viveka the description in this verse (B. K. L. IV. 38.) seeks to bring out the great number of horses; hence it should be an example of the figure Hyperbole (Atiśayokti) which consists– [according to उद्भट (U. K. L. S-P. 40) quoted in this context (P. 29, P. 24–25)]–in describing with some motive,something so as to cross the bounds of worldly experience.

(P. 29, l. 26) Deśa-kālādi-viruddha according to Rudraṭa is discussed. Every genus (jāti), quality (guṇa), action (kriyā) or substance (dravya) has got its own peculiar nature and is conditioned by space and time. It should, therefore, be described in conformity with and not against them, unless there is some reason (kāraṇa). Poets are sometimes carried away by exceeding zeal and violate this rule[1] and consequently land themselves into what Rudraṭā calls the Atimātra doṣa.

Whatever inordinately transgresses the limit of worldly experience is Atimātra.[2]

The ill. is (P. 30, l. 26):

'tava virahe hariṇākṣyāḥ plāvayati jaganti nayanāmbu' [3]

This is contrary to experience, for tears can at the most wet a portion of the upper garment but they cannot inundate the three worlds, hence the statement is Atimātra.

It may be questioned (P. 31, l. 5) as to how, then, certain abstract ideas are described as having tangible qualities. Fame (yaśas), for instance, cannot be seen, yet it is spoken of as having white colour[4].

The reply is : The convention of good poets to describe such things thus is the justification for that, and even for such descriptions which are contrary to our everyday experience.[5]

(p. 31, l. 6) Exceptional cases when absence of propriety is a guṇa are given after Rudraṭa:

What is contrary to propriety may be all the more fitting and apposite when the persons speaking such words are afflicted with madness (unmāda), stupidity (maurkhya) or longing (utkaṇṭhā).[6]

The ills. are[7] : (i) Unmāda (p 31, l. 8):

nabhaḥ khaṇḍaṁ jalaṁ suṣkaṁ gaja-garjita-miśritam |

(iii) Utkaṇṭhā (P. 31, l. 13): The Meghadūta.[1]

Bhoja divides Viruddha into three types : Pratykṣa-viruddha (what is against Perception), Anumāna-viruddha (what is against Inference) and Āgama-viruddha (what is against Śastra). The first is divided into several sub varieties: Deśa-virodha, Kāla-virodha, Loka-virodha etc. The ills. of these are not traceable in Viveka. But these[2] correspond to the Deśa-virodhi, Kāla-virodhi and Loka-virodhi of Bhāmaha and Daṇḍī.[3]

Anumāna-viruddha[4] (contrary to Inference) is further divided into Yukti-viruddha (contrary to Reasoning), Aucitya-viruddha (contrary to Propriety), Pratijnā-viruddha (contrary to Vow).

The ill. of Yukti-viruddha is not traceable.

The ill. of Aucitya-viruddha is (p. 31, l. 13).[5]

A pauper is described here as wiping with his silken upper garment his beloved's face which was suffused with perspiration. How can a pauper afford the luxury of a silk garment! The verse, therefore, offends against propriety, and involves the doṣa.

(p. 31, l. 14,) Deśa-virodhi, Kāla-virodhi and Loka-virodhi are first defined.[6] Then exceptions to these are treated. Sometimes due to the skill of the poet these doṣas become guṇas. The illustrations of Deśa-virodhi[7], Kāla-virodhi[8] and Loka-virodhi[9] as guṇas are not traceable.

[3] According to Vāmana Deśa-virodhi, Kāla-virodhi and Svabhāva-virodhi are all Loka-viruddha. (cf देशकालस्वभावविरुद्धार्थानि लोकविरुद्धानि । K. L. S. II. ii. 23.)

Yukti-viruddha is a guṇa in the following ill.[1] (p. 21, l. 15):

sa saṅkocaś candrād iva kumuda–rāśer aśaraṇaḥ sa sūryāt kokānāṁ viraha iva lupta-pratividhiḥ/guṇebhyas te kheda-praśamana-karebhyo 'pi yad ayaṁ khalānām udvegas tad idam amṛtād eva maraṇam //[2]

Here the unreasonable senses express the probable standards of comparison and are therefore faultless.

(p. 31, l. 19) Then Kānti, a guṇa according to Bhoja, is discussed to give a complete idea of the Atimātra-doṣa; for doṣas are by nature the reverse of guṇas (guṇa viparyayātmano doṣāḥ/).[3] The Atimātra doṣa is defined by Bhoja thus:

'yat sarva-lokātītārtham atimātraṁ tad ucyate/'[4]

whatever meaning transgresses the worldly experience is Atimātra.

(p. 31, l. 19) Kānta is a guṇa that exists in friendly talks and in descriptions (tac ca vārtā 'bhidhāneṣu varnanāsv api vidyate[5]).

(p. 31, l. 21) Kānta is that which is considered agreeable in the world and which conforms to the ordinary possibilities (Kāntaṁ jagati tat kāntaṁ laukikārthānuyāyi yat /).[6]

When some description transgresses the bounds of worldly experience Atyukti (or Atimātra) is the consequence. But Gauḍas delight in it hence for them it becomes a guṇa.[7]

The ill. of Atyukti as a guṇa is (p. 31, l. 23):

"From to-day onwards our house has become sanctified like the temple of God, as all the blemishes thereof have been washed off by the falling of the dust of your feet."[8] Here the honour done by a Riṣi by his visit to the house of a person is described in a hyperbolic way as it is permitted by the learned (vidagdha).

2. The comments on this verse are borrowed by Kalpalatā (Viveka P. 31, l. 15) from Bhoja's remark on S. K. I. v. 199 (P. 137) :

   (ibid) I. v. 185 borrowed from K. D. (vide K. D. I. 91.)

The other ill. is : (p. 31. l. 26). "The creator has of course created a very small sky without anticipating such progressive development of the breasts of your ladyship."[1] The precociously developing breasts of the heroine are described in a highly exaggerated manner, yet it is a guṇa as it describes the wonderful manner in which the breasts developed.

(p. 31, l. 27) The above are the ills. of Atimātra. One would naturally like to know what Anatimātra is[2]. That is to say, wherein lies Kānti ? Here the ills. of Anatimātra—what the Vaidarbhas call Kānta—are given:

"That verily is a house which is honoured by the hallowed dust of the feet of your honour who are the accumulation of penances.[3]" and

"O spotless one, the space between your delicate (creepes-like) arms is not sufficient for these two breasts which are now developing fast.[4]"

The contexts in the above verses are the same as those in the ills. of Atyukti[5] but here the statements do not transgress the bounds of ordinary worldly experience.

(iv)[6] Kalā-viruddha (p. 32, l 18) When a poem offends against the rules of some fine art like dancing (nṛtta), dramatic art (nāṭya), music (gīta) etc, it is Kalā-viruddha

(a) Gīta-viruddha (p. 32, l. 20) What violates the rules of the art of music is Gīta-viruddha. The ill. is (p. 32, l. 25) :

[2] Kalpalatā borrows here (P. 31, l. 27) from Bhoja: अथानतिमात्रं कीदृक् । K. P. 13[illegible]. These words are meant to introduce the ills, of Kānta–guṇa. After this question Bhoja continues: उच्यते– (Then the ills. given below are quoted from Daṇḍī—vide S. K. I. vv. 186, 187.)

[6] Before the discussion of this doṣa there is a long passage (P. 32, l. 1 to 17.), which as the editors note is not found (vide fn. 1–2 to P. 32) in ख and ग mss. The significance of this passage cannot be appreciated. Looking to the general reliability of these two mss its organic relation with Viveka may be questionable.

[7] शिशु० I. 10.

The second ill. is (p. 33, l. 8.):

śruti-samadhikam uccaiḥ pañcamaṁ pīḍayantaḥ satatam ṛṣabha-hīnaṁ bhinnakīkṛtya ṣaḍjam/praṇijagadur akāku-śrāvaka-snigdha-kaṇṭhāḥ

In Māgadhī gīti, pañcama is to be avoided in bhinnaṣḍja. For binna-ṣadja is without pañcama and ṛṣabha.[2]

(b) Nṛtta-kalā-virodhi (p. 33, l. 22): What violates the rules of dancing laid down by sage Bharata is against the art of dancing. If, for instance, (p. 33, l. 22)[3] some other gods than Viṣṇu, Umā and Maheśvara are respectively worshipped in Raṅga-dvāra (Puṣpāñjali), Cāri (Lāsya) and Mahā-cārī (Tāṇḍava) it would be Nṛtta-kalā-viruddha.[4]

(c) Nāṭya-kalā-viruddha (p. 40, l. 21): What violates the rules of dramaturgy is Nāṭya-kalā-virodhi. The ill. is (p. 40, l. 22):

'sthāyino 'rthe pravartante bhāvāḥ sañcāriṇo yathā / rasasyaikasya bhūyāṁsas tathā netur mahībhṛtaḥ//[5]

Here the words 'sthāyinaḥ rasasya' are against the theory of Rasa according to all the three schools.[6]

(v) Nyāya-virodhi (p. 41. l. 25): Nyāya means Śāstra, which deals with

This verse is quoted by Hemacandra as the ill. of the same doṣa. The comments on it in H. K. S. are borrowed by Kalpalatā. The whole passage on P. 33, l. 73 to l. 21 is borrowed from H. K. S. V. (P. 269) The verses are all borrowed from N. S. (XXVIII. 42-45), The verse धांशस्तु etc. is quoted also by रत्नेश्वर on S. K. the three human objectives (trivarga). It is also called daṇḍa-nīti.[1] Whatever is against this is Nyāya-virodhi. This doṣa is borrowed from Bhāmaha's Kāvyālaṁkāra.[2] To illustrate this doṣa Bhāmaha discusses at length an incident from Vatsarāja's life, described in some work. According to Viveka one Viṣṇugupta had presented five irrebuttable objections to the device of leather-elephant described by Guṇāḍhya[3] even though the conspiracy of Rumaṇvān and others with Mahāsena is justified by Subandhu, and others[4] on the ground that it resulted in Vatsa's marriage with Vāsavadattā. The objections are given in Viveka (p. 42, l. 27):

(i) No purpose is served by consigning Vatsa to Ujjayinī after his arrest.

(ii) Even when Vatsa was in his own kingdom, there was sufficient fear of a possible attack from Āruṇī, the neighbouring King of Pāñcala and this would be all the more possible when Vatsa was arrested and committed to Ujjayinī. That would result in danger to the King (svāmī), the prime constituent (prakṛti) of the kingdom, for enemies always wait for a weak point and never fail to avail themselves of it, once they spot it.

[3] (P. 42, l 1)—सुबन्धु is refered to as Vyākhyātā, probably because he tried to account for the discrepancies in Guṇāḍhya's story in his play which is referred to (at P. 44, l. 19 & 23) in Viveka. Mm. T. Ganapatiśastri believes that Bhāmaha refers to the Pratijñā–yaugandharāyaṇa of Bhāsa. (vide Hist of SK. Poetics – Mm. P. V. Kane P. XXXVIII where he discards this view). Prof. Tatacharya thinks that Bhāmaha refers either to प्रतिज्ञायोगन्ध. or some other poetical work which has the same story as that of Pratijñā–yaugandharāyaṇa. (B. K. L. S.K. Intro.-P. XL) According to Viveka Bhāmaha criticises Guṇādhya (vide P. 42, l. 22).

[4] As the compound सुबन्धुप्रभृतिभिः is used we cannot decide whether सुबन्धु is the author of both नाट्यधार and उन्मतयौगन्धरायण or of any one of them.

(iii) Before the capture of Vatsa, a battle was inevitable and if so, it was difficult to eliminate the possibility of serious personal danger to the King himself.

(iv) There was no guarantee that Mahāsena would not subsequently change his mind; it was on the contrary, possible that once he had Vatsa in his power he would change his mind.

(v) It is obviously worse than puerile for Vatsa not to realise the difference between a real elephant and one made of leather.

The respective replies to these objections are discussed as follows (p. 43, l. 8 ff):

(i) King Pradyota offered his daughter Vāsavadattā in marriage to Vatsarāja. But Vatsa did not approve of the suit as Pradyota was a mere quiver-bearer, whereas he was the scion of the lunar race. Yaugandharāyaṇa and others did not want to offend the powerful Pradyota. On the contrary they were eager for an alliance with him hence they reposed trust in Pradyota and conspired with him under a bonafide belief that when the gallant Vatsa saw the lovely Vāsavadatta he would definitely fall in love with her.

(ii) (p. 43, l. 13) Vatsa had shifted the onus of the State on the able shoulders of his ministers.[1] His presence in or absence from the state was, therefore of little moment. If on the contrary Pradyota were offended. the Kingdom of Vatsa would be indefensible against the concerted attack of Pradyota and Āruṇi.

(iii) (p. 43, l. 23) The soldiers who staged a sham attack on Vatsarāja were his own attendants therefore would not hurt him.

(iv) (p. 43, l. 26) Pradyota was the maternal uncle of Vatsa. It was improbable, therefore, that he should mean any harm to the latter especially in view of the fact that Pradyota's loving nature was tested by Sāṅkṛtyāyanī, whose loyalty to Vatsarāja was unquestionable.

[1] Viveka (P. 43, l. 15) remarks that this is accounted for in उन्मत्तयोगन्धरायण; again (P, 43, l. 21) points out that सुवन्धु has accounted even for the objection that the soldiers might kill him in the skirmish. This अपि (एतदपि) suggests that उन्मत्तयौगन्धरायण was the work of सुवन्धु. We do not know who this सुवन्धु is. Perhaps he is the one referred to by Sāradātanaya in his Bhāvaprakāśana. We also do not know whether this सुवन्धु is the author of Vāsavadattā.

(v) (P. 44, l. 23) Vatsa thought that the elephant was under the influence of rut.

Thus nothing is objectionable in the Vāsavadattā lambhaka of the Bṛhatkathā.

(vi) Āgama-virodhi (p. 45, l. 6)[1]: Whatever offends against Āgama i.e. scriptures, is Āgama-virodhi. Bhāmaha explains this doṣa thus:

āgamo dharma-śāstrāṇi loka-sīmā ca tat-kṛtā /
tad-virodhi tadācāra-vyatikramaṇato //[2]

Āgama means scriptures, and the limit or bounds of general behaviour laid down by them. Whatever transgresses this limit is Āgama-virodhi hence faulty (duṣṭa). The ill.[3] of this doṡa is not traceable in Viveka.[4]

(vii to x) (p. 45, l. 9) In the beginning of the fifth chapter of his Kāvyālaṁkāra, Bhāmaha offers an apology for the inclusion of the discussion of topics on Logic and Epistemology in a work dealing with rhetorics. Generally unintellegent people are afraid of studying Śāstras as they are difficult to understand. This discussion of topics on Logic is, therefore, calculated to slowly and sweetly introduce them

---

1. Viveka probably suggests (p. 42, l. 11) that Bhāmaha rather wanted to justify 'the leather-elephant incident'–than criticise it. It interprets (B. K. L. IV. 51): "न दूषणायायमुदाहृतो विधिः etc. /" quoted fully in Viveka (p. 43, l. 13), accordingly, so as to apply it to the Nyāya-virodhi-doṣa only. But this verse coming at the end of the treatment of doṣas as it does, is applicable to all the doṣas treated in the chapter wherein the illustrations are based on works of earlier poets. So it applies to Āgama-virodhi-doṣa also which follows Nyāya-virodhi as well as to certain other doṣas which precede the latter in the matter of treatment. Prof, Tatacharya rightly interprets it thus, and he does not restrict it to the Nyāya-virodhi-doṣa alone; for Āgama-virodhi precedes this last verse. It need not be thought that this verse 'न दूषणाय &c' came immediately after the treatment of Nyāya–virodhi in the Viveka-kāra's text of B. K. L. for Viveka also points out that it is the last verse, vide यत् स एवात्मन औद्धत्यं परिहरन् अध्यायसमाप्तावुक्तवान्। (p. 42, l. 12). It is suggested in the Udyānavṛtti that the reading 'किमु प्रतीतये' is not proper. ("'किमु प्रतीतये' इति पठ्यमानं न सम्यक्"–Udyāna-Vṛtti on B K.L. IV. 51.) Viveka also has the same reading and interprets 'किमु' as 'किन्तु' in the same way as Prof. Tatacharya does.
2. B. K. L. IV. 48.
3. vide B. K. L. IV. 49–50.
4. Kalpalatā did not illustrate this doṣa or at least did not quote Bhāmaha's ill. of this doṣa (for detailed discussion on this ill. vide Udyānavṛtti on B. K. L. IV. 49–50), probably because it offends against a Brahmanical Śāstraic text. Viveka remarks that whatever offends against the Dharma-śāstra in which one believes is Āgama-virodhi for him (p. 45, l. 7). This suggests that the illustration given by Bhāmaha (at B. K. L. IV. 49-50) was not acceptable to the author of Kalpalatā, who was in all probability a Jain.

to the subject.[1] Even a Śāstra becomes relishable when its dullness is tempered with the mellifluous flavour of Poetry. Those who have tasted honey first, swollow bitter medicine[2]. Moreover there is nothing that is not useful to a Poet; every word, sense, maxim or art becomes subservient to poetry, hence great is the burden of the poet,[3] who has to press all these into his service.

Therefore such discussions are quite useful in a work on Poetics.

The Pratijñādi-doṣa is borrowed from Bhāmaha's Kāvyālaṁkāra.[4] Pratijnā-hīna arises when the pratijñā (proposition) is faulty. But pratijñā is based on means of proof—viz Perception (Pratyakṣa) and Inference (Anumāna).[5] Therefore the definition of Perception is given (p. 46, l. 25) according to Digṅāga: "Pratykṣaṁ kalpanāpoḍham/[6]. Viveka discusses in detail the other varieties of Pratyakṣa or perception viz Mānasa-pratyakṣa (mental perception) and Yogi-pratyakṣa (intellegent intuition of the saint)

(p. 47, l. 15) After this the definition of perception according to Vasubandhu is given: 'tato 'rthād iti kecana'[7]

(p. 47, l. 20) Kalpanā (construction) is defined: "Kalpanāṁ nāma-jātyādi-yojanāṁ pratijānate /"[8]

Both these definitions of Pratyakṣa are refuted by Bhāmaha.[9]

(p. 52, l. 3) Definition of Anumāna (Inference) given by Bhāmaha[10] is discussed'. "Trirūpāl liṅgato jñānam/"

[10] B. K. L. V. 11.

Inference (Anumāna) is cognition based on Reason, having three aspects (rūpa). The three aspects of the Reason (liṅga) are (i) the presence of the liṅga (Reason) in the object of Inference (pakṣa), (ii) its presence only (eva) in Similar cases (sa-pakṣa) and (iii) its absence from Dissimilar cases (vi-paksa). [1]

(p. 52, l. 3) It is necessary as a rule that the liṅga (Reason) should be present in the pakṣa; it is also necessary that it should be present in the sa-pakṣa but not as a rule, only that it should merely be present in the similar cases; and it is also necessary as a rule that the liṅga be absent from the vi-pakṣa.

(p. 54, l. 18) Another definition of Inference is given:[2] Others[3] say that Inference is, "a knowledge of an object inseparably connected (with another object), by a person who knows about it (from Perception)."[4]

(p. 55, l. 17) In order to explain the defects of Thesis (pratijñā), Bhāmaha defines pratijñā thus:[5] The substratum (dharmī) together with the attribute which is to be cognised (dharma) is the object of Inference (pakṣa). Thesis (pratijñā) is the statement of the relation between the substratum (or substance) and its attribute.

Thereafter the doṣas of pratijñā (Thesis) are treated: (p. 55, l. 9)[6]

(i) When the thing to be established is already proved by another means of proof, Inference is needless, hence such a Thesis is said to suffer from the doṣa of prasiddha-dharmatva.

(ii) When the contrary of what is to be established is proved by some other means of proof, the Thesis is defective. This is possible in three ways according as the contrary of what is to be established is proved by (a) pratyakṣa, (b) anumāna or (c) śabda:

(a) When the Thesis is contradicted by pratyakṣa (perception) it is called pratyakṣa-bādhinī (contradicted by perception).

(c) When the Thesis is contradicted by anumāna (Inference) it is called hetu-bādhinī (contradicted by Reason).

(c) When it is contradicted by śabada (word), there are two possibilities: (1) when the word is accepted as authoritative by all, [it is sarvāgama-virodhinī (contradicted by all the scriptures)], and (2) when the word is accepted as authoritative by oneself either presently or previously (at any other time). In the first case the doṣa is tadartha-virodhinī, in the second, i.e. when the word is accepted as authoritative (at any other time), it is siddhānta–virodhinī.

In short, when pratijñā (Thesis) is contradicted by some or the other means of proof five dośas arise, as it is vitiated due to this contradiction. When it is established by a powerful means of proof one doṣa arises. So there are six doṣōs of Thesis [1] (Pratijñā).

The illustrations of these doṣas are not traceable in Viveka. [2]

(viii) (P. 56, l. 11) With a view to point out the doṣas of Reason (hetu), the latter is defined thus: Reason (hetu) is that which is accepted by both the parties (i. e. the vādī and the prativādī) and which is present in a Similar case (sapakṣa) and absent from a Dis-similar case (vipakṣa). It has thus three aspects (lakṣaṇas). The contrary of hetu is a defective hetu (hetvābhasa).[3] The words 'accepted by both' (dvayoḥ san) mean accepted by both the disputants, the protagonist wants to logically establish it, the antagonist to so refute it (p. 57, l. 10).[1] Thus as the stand-points are different (phala-bhedād) the Reason is spoken of as existing in two[2] (san dvajoḥ) and not merely existing in one (i. e. pakṣa), otherwise it would not be possible to account for the fallacious Reason (hetvābhāsa) called anyatarāsiddha (which arises when the hetu is not accepted either by the protagonist or by the antagonist or by both.)

It is pointed out earlier (p, 56, l. 11) that Reason (hetu) must exist in a Similar case (sapaksa). Now sapaksa is defined thus (p. 57, l. 21): A similar case is an object which is similar in possessing (anugamataḥ) the inferred property (sādhya-dharma). It is metaphorically called sa-pakṣa (similar case) as it possesses properties analogous to those of the pakṣa (object of Inference).[3] A dis-similar case (vi-paksa) is that which is not similar (visadṛśa) to the pakṣa. A hetu which is not found in a dis-similar case is said to be excluded (vyāvṛtta) from that.[4]

(p 58, l. 22) Reason (hetu) is already defined, now is given the supplementary portion which strengthens this definition.

"When it is shown that the thing to be proved (sādhya) is invariably present when the Reason (hetu) is present and that the Reason (hetu) is absent whenever the thing to be proved (sādhya) is absent; in short, when there is a relation of positive concomitance (anvaya) and negative concomitance [contra-position i. e. vyatireka] between the sādhya and the hetu, the definition of Reason (hetu) is strengthened in its correctness."[5]

(p. 60, l. 2) Bhāmaha does not give the illustrations of defective Reasons, but Viveka does. A hetu must have three aspects but if it is deficient in any one or more or all of them, it becomes defective (ābhāsa). When a hetu is deficient in one of the aspects (laksaṇa) three hetvābhāsas arise,[6] when it is deficient in two aspects three other hetvābhāsas arise,[7]

5. इति द्वयैकानुगतिव्यावृत्तो लक्ष्मसाधुता । (ibid) V. 25.cd. cf उद्यानवृत्ति (p. 113) for a different interpretation. Prof. Tatacharya rightly suggests that there should be a better reading here. He is not satisfied with the reading "द्वयैकानुगतिव्यावृत्तिर्लक्ष्मसाधुता ।" which according to him means "Presence in two (pakṣa and sa-pakṣa) and absence from one (vipakṣa) contributes to the correctness of the definition."

6. They are : (1) साधारणानैकान्तिक (2) असाधारणानैकान्तिक and (3) असिद्ध.

7. They are : (1) विरुद्ध (2) असिद्धसाधारणानैकान्तिक and (3) असिद्धासाधारण.

when it is deficient in all the three aspects another hetvābhāsa arises. Thus there are seven hetvābhāsas, which are all illustrated and explained in Viveka.[1]

(ix) (p 61, l. 18) Now in order to introduce the doṣa of defective Example (Dṛṣṭānta-duṣṭa),[2] Example (dṛṣṭānta) is defined:[3] What is logically proved either to possess or not to possess the object of Inference (sādhya-dharma) and the Reason (sādhana–dharma), is called Example (Dṛṣṭānta). If it is otherwise, it is called a defective (duṣṭa) [4] Example. It is defective when either the object to be proved is not present in it, or when the hetu is not present or when neither the sādhya nor the hetu is present.[1]

[1] It is : असिद्धविरुद्ध only. In all there are seven (3+3+1).
The ills. are as follows: (p. 60, l. 3ff.)

(1) विरुद्ध (p. 60, l 5) : नित्यः शब्दः कृतकत्वात् । Here the hetu, 'being a product', is not present in the similar case (ākāśa) and also in the dissimilar case (ghaṭa).

(2) असिद्धासाधारणानैकान्तिक (p. 60, l. 10) : नित्यः शब्दः मूर्तत्वात् । Here the hetu, 'having limitedly extended body,' is absent from the pakṣa (शब्द), present in vipakṣa (घटादि) and according to Kaṇāda in sapakṣa (परमाण्वादि).

(3) असिद्धासाधारण (p. 60, l. 16) : नित्यः शब्दः अप्रमेयत्वात् । Here the hetu, 'not being cognisable', is absent from the pakṣa (शब्द) and the sa-pakṣa (परणाण्वादि) as also from the vipakṣa (घटादि).

(4) साधारणानैकान्तिक (p. 60, l. 22) : अनित्यः शब्दः अमूर्तत्वात् । Here, the hetu 'not having limitedly extended body,' is present in pakṣa (शब्द) as well as in sa-pakṣa (बुद्धि) but it is also present in the vi-pakṣa (आकाश).

(5) असाधारणानैकान्तिक (p. 60, l. 27) : अनित्यः शब्दः श्रावणत्वात् । Here, the hetu 'being apprehended by the sense of audition,' is present in the pakṣa (शब्द), absent from the vi-pakṣa (आकाश) but also from the sapakṣa (घट) [for श्रावणत्व belongs to sound alone, acc. to Bauddhas, though acc. to Kaṇāda it belongs to सामान्य (genus) also.]

(6) असिद्ध (p. 61, l, 5) : अनित्यः शब्दः चाक्षुषत्वात् । Here the hetu 'being perceived by vision,' is present in sa-pakṣa (घट) and is absent from vipakṣa (परमाण्वादि), but also from the pakṣa (शब्द).

(7) असिद्धविरुद्ध (p. 61, l. 13) अनित्यः शब्दः अकृतकत्वात् । Here the hetu 'not being a product,' is present neither in the pakṣa (शब्द) nor in the sa-pakṣa (घटादि), and is present in the vi-pakṣa (आकाश). Hence it is deficient in all the three aspects whereas the first three of the above are deficient in two aspects & the next three in one.

[2] Bhāmaha has treated of this doṣa : प्रतिज्ञाहेतुदृष्टान्तहीनम् &c । B. K. L. V. 1.

[4] तदाभस्तदवृत्तितः । V. 26 d.

(p. 62, l. 5) Viveka notes that as the above definition of Example is too wide another definition is given (by Bhāmaha).[2] Others define Example as the presence of the thing to be proved (sādhya) when the Reason (hetu) is present and the absence of the Reason (hetu) when the thing to be proved (sādhya) is absent." In this definition the relation of positive and negative concomitance is stressed hence it does not suffer from the above doṣa of being too wide.

(p. 62. l. 17) Dūṣaṇās are treated after this. The definition is[3] :" Refutation (dūṣanā) is the indication of insufficiency and other fallacies (nyūnatādi)[4]

The refutation lies in pointing out insufficiency in respect of hetu etc. (p. 63. l. 21). As logical disputation (Kathā) is based on refutation it is given here though it is implicitly treated under the discussion of defective Thesis (Pratijñā).[5]

(p. 63, l. 23) Logical disputation[6] (Kathā) is of three types: Vāda (wrangling or peirastic debate), Jalpa (dialectical debate or controversial assertion or rejoinder) and Vitaṇḍā (frivolous argument or sophistic debate) (p. 64, l. 1). Of these the Buddhists accept only Vāda (wrangling) and reject the other two as being unconnected prattling.

[1] Explanation of dṛṣṭānta doṣa according to Viveka may be thus summarised :

दृष्टान्त is duṣṭa when it is,

साध्यविकल	साधनविकल	उभयविकल
ill. शब्दोऽनित्यः अमूर्तत्वात्। आकाशवत्। here साध्य is absent from the दृष्टान्त which is नित्य.	ill. शब्दोऽनित्यः अमूर्तत्वात्। घटवत् here the साधन is absent from the दृष्टान्त which is मूर्त.	ill. शब्दोऽनित्यः अमूर्तत्वात्। परमाणुवत्। here neither the साध्य nor the साधन is present in the दृष्टान्त which is नित्य and मूर्त.

[2] साध्येन लिङ्गानुगतिस्तदभावे च नास्तिता।

[3] दूषणं न्यूनताद्युक्तिः। (ibid) V. 28 a. cf दूषणा न्यूनताद्युक्तिः। न्या. वि. III. 137. Probably Viveka reads दूषणा न्यूनता etc (vide P. 63, ll. 16 & 22). Prof. Tatacharya reads "दूषणां न्यूनता &c", the sense being the same.

(p. 64, l. 2)[1] Wrong refutations (dūṣaṇābhāsa) are sophitry (evasive answers)[2]. As Chala is of the same nature as Jāti it is not treated here. (p. 64, l. 14) The definition of Chala (ambiguous speech)[3] is given and its three types according as it pertains to Vāk (equivocal words), Upacāra (metaphors) and Sāmānya (equivocal proposition) are given. Bhāmaha does not deal with them.[4]

(p. 65, l. 6)[5] The foregoing discussion of Pratijñā etc. is useful in poems which are śāstra-like in nature[6]. But in other poems (i.e. to say in Mahā-kāvyas etc.) pratijñā etc. of an altogether different nature occur. The appropriate definition (nyāyyaṁ lakṣaṇam) of the latter is given afterwards.

(p. 65, l. 15) Definition of cause discussed in B. K. L. V. 31 is explained. (p. 66, l. 10) In this way distinct natures (bhedena) of Theses as well as the doṣas of their applications are the treated differently in Śāstras.[7] But the experts have revealed pratijñā etc. of an altogether different nature in Poetical compositions. This is quite natural as Poetry depends on worldly experience whereas scriptures depend on truth.[8]

(p. 67, l. 14) Sky (ākāśa) is spoken of as having the hue of steel (literally, sword), but really it is colourless (nīrūpa); sound (śabda) is described as spreading far, whereas it is all-pervading according to Mīmāṁsakas; according to Vaiśeṣikas it cannot spread as they believe in the continuation of point-instants of sound (śabda-santāna). The waters of rivers are said to be the same, though they are really not so; and flames (arcis) are described as being wonderfully motionless, though essentially they are not so. Thus there is an obvious difference between the scope and approach of these two, Poetry and Śāstra, which entails a separate and distinct discussion of the pratijñā etc. pertaining to the former.[1]

(vii) The definition of pratijñā in Poetry is not traceable in Viveka. According to Bhāmaha it is the undertaking of the desired task.[2] It is of four types according as the desired task undertaken appertains to Dharma (duty), Artha (wealth), Kāma (lust) or Kopa (anger).[3] The ills. of different types of pratijñā are:

(i) Dharma-nimittā (p. 67, l. 19):
Jarām eṣa bibharmīti pratijñāya pitur yathā/
tathaiva Puruṇā 'bhāri sā syād dharma-nibandhanī // [4]

Puru took a vow, as a filial duty (dharma) to take over the oldage of his father Yayāti, in order to unable him to enjoy the blooming youth of Sarmiṣṭhā, and he carried out this vow (pratijñā). This vow is made for Dharma.

(ii) Artha-nimittā (p. 67, l. 20):
upalapsye svayaṁ Sītām iti bhartṛ-nideśataḥ/
Hanumatā pratijñāya sa jñātety artha-saṁśrayā// [5]

Hanumān promised that he would personally institute a search for Sita, by the order of his lord, and carried it out. Hence it is known as Artha-saṁśrayā, based on Artha.

(iii) Kāma-nimittā. The ill. of this type of pratijñā is not traceable in Viveka [6]

Vatsarāja, made a vow that he would kidnap the daughter [ātmajā] of Mahāsena and did so. This vow is based on Love (काम).

(iv) Kopa-nimittā (p. 67, 1, 27):

Bhrātur bhrātṛvyam unmathya pāsyāmy asyāsṛg āhave|
partijñāva yathā Bhīmas tat cakārāvaśo ruṣā // [1]

Bhīma took a vow that he would drink the gore of his brother's (Yudhiṣthira's) enemy after having killed him in the battle. He then carried out this vow in a feat of anger. Here the vow to wreak vengence on the enemy is taken through wrath, hence the Pratijñā is Kopa-nimitta.

(p. 67, l. 22) [2] Pratijñā should not be made for any purpose other than those mentioned above nor should it be abandoned, otherwise it would be a defective Pratijñā (Pratijñābhasa). Thus, when it does not have anything to be achieved, or when the thing sought to be achieved is already achieved, or when it is abandoned, [3] Pratijñābhāsa results.

The ill. of Dharma-bādhinī is not traceable in Viveka. [4]

(p. 67, l. 25): The ill. of Artha-bādhinī:

Āhuto na nivarte'haṁ dyūtāyeti Yudhiṣṭhiraḥ /
kṛtvā sandhāṁ Śakuninā didevety artha-bādhinī // [5]

Yudhiṣṭhira vowed not to return to gambling and yet he played at dice with Śakuni. The vow was not carried out and consequently he lost his kingdom. Thus it is against Artha.

The ills. of Kāma-bādhinī [6] and Kopa-bādhinī [7] Pratijñās are not traceable in Viveka.

(p. 67, l. 26) Sometimes Pratijñā is implied and not stated in so many words. The ill. is (p. 67, 1, 26):

kim indriya-dviṣāṁ jeyaṁ, ko nirākriyate'rthibhiḥ /
ko vā gatvaram arthibhyo, na yacchati dhanaṁ laghu // [8]

(p. 68, l. 1) Here 'kim' expresses question, but it indicates (lakṣaṇayā) the senses of 'contempt' for or 'disapprobation' of the enthusiasm regarding victory etc., and ultimately points out that such over enthusiasm should be avoided, as the thing can be easily accomplished (saukarya).[1]

(viii) Hetu (Reason) in Poetry (p. 68, l. 13):[2] In Poetry too Reason (hetu) has three aspects like that in Śāstra, and Inference is based on agreement (anvaya) and difference (vyatireka). But here the existence of hetu in the object of inference (Pakṣa) may not be stated in so many words for it is suggested by virtue of the import.

Inspite of this, Poetic Reason (hetu) is competent to bring about inference of the sādhya (what is to be proved). In Arthāntara-nyāsa, positive and negative concomitance is understood by the force of the import even though it is not stated in so many words, unlike the instance 'yat kṛtakaṁ tad anityam.' For if it were so, the figure Arthāntaranyāsa would not be there.

The ill. is (p. 68, l. 19.):

yathā'bhito vanābhoge etad asti mahat-saraḥ / kūjanāt kurarīṇāñ ca kamalānāñ ca saurabhāt //[3]

Crying (kūjana) and fragrance (saurabha) are not the properties of the forest region (vanābhoga), 'the substratum' here. 'Crying' is the property of the ospreys as the relation of producer (janaka) and the produced (janya) subsists between the two. Similarly fragrance is the property of the lotuses as it inheres in them; it is also indirectly the property of the breeze, yet in the illustration the hetu is competent to justify the inference of the lake.

(p. 68, l. 22.): Even in the stock illustration, 'parvato vāhnimān', this dependence on relation is inevitable, for there too smoke is seen in the sky and it is instrumental in effecting the inference of the fire only in a particular place on the mountain.[4]

(p. 68, l. 24): In poetry sometimes Reason (hetu) is not distinctly stated from sādhya (what is to be proved) and the latter is established even without positive and negative concomitance.[5]

Here 'long disappearance of the sun' can be logically proved only by the Reason dīpra-dīpatvam (possessing brilliantly shining lamps). [2]

(p. 70, l. 4) Fallacies of Reason (hetvābhāsa) in Poetry: [3] According to Bhāmaha there are three fallacies of Reason in poetry viz. Ajñāna, Saṁśaya and Viparyayakṛt [4]

The ills. of these fallacious Reasons are not traceable [5]

(ix) Dṛṣṭānta in poetry (p. 70, l. 8): Example (in poetry) is the demonstration of the reflection of the sense already expressed. [6] This definition is not traceable in Viveka. But an objection is taken to this definition of Example, as follows:

(p. 70, l. 8) [7] Example (Dṛṣṭānta) is not different from Simile (Upamā). In Upamā there is a relation of the object and the image (bimba-pratibimba-bhāva). In 'candra iva mukham', an ill. of Upamā, mukha (face) is the object (bimba) and candra (moon) is the image (pratibimba). In Dṛṣṭānta e.g. 'tanur-iayṁ kva vilocana-hāriṇī similar relation subsists. Why should it not then be included in Upamā?

Bhāmahas reply to this objections is (p. 70, l. 11):
'na hetv anabhidhānataḥ /' [8] It cannot be so included under Upamā as the definition of Upamā viz. "The charming similitude between the thing

4. The compound अज्ञानसंशयज्ञानविपर्ययकृतः is dissolved thus : अज्ञानः च संशयः च विपर्ययकृत् च अज्ञानसंशयविपर्ययकृतः । Viveka notes that it is wrong to dissolve it as 'अज्ञानं च संशयज्ञानं च विपर्ययश्च तान् कुर्वन्ति इति' अज्ञान being negative in nature cannot have a productive cause (cf. उ. वृ. p. 123).

5: [vide] B. K. L. V. 53 and 54.

6. उक्तस्यार्थस्य दृष्टान्तः प्रतिबिम्बनिदर्शनम् । [ibid] V. 55 ab.

7. ननूपमानमेवास्तु । [ibid] V. 55c. This is a better reading. Prof Tatacharya reads 'ननूपमानुमैवास्तु ।' [vide उ. वृ. p. 124 ff.].

8. हेत्वनभिधानतः is explained thus in Viveka (P. 70 l 25) : तेन शब्दसामर्थ्यावसेयोपमानोपमेयभावत्वस्योपमालक्षणस्य अविद्यमानत्वाद् उपमाहेतोः उपमालक्षणस्य अनभिधानम् इति दृष्टान्तस्य उपमातः पृथग्भावेन अभिधानम् । compared (upameya) and the thing to which it is compared (upamāna) is called Upamā." [1] Definition (lakṣaṇa) is the logical Reason (hetu) of Upamā because it indicates what it seeks to define (i. e. upamā) and distinguishes it from other similar figures on the one hand and from the forms of other dissimilar things like, the form of poetry, removable (anitya) and permanent (nitya) doṣas, guṇas, and particular figures of sound on the other. Hence definition (lakṣaṇa) is called the hetu of Upamā.

(p. 70, l. 20) But this definition is not applicable to the illustration 'tānur iyaṁ kva etc', where the relation of upamāna and upameya between 'tanu' and 'navamālikā' on the one hand and 'tāpasa' and 'kuśa' on the other, is not stated in so many words, unlike that in 'candra iva mukham' or 'śastrī-śyāmā Devadattā.' [2] Therefore Dṛṣṭānta is not included in Upamā. The ingredients of Upamā, given by Bhaṭṭodbhaṭa (Vivaraṇakṛt) [3] are three:· the desire to establish the relation of Upamāna and Upameya, similarity (sāmya), and ·words like iva and others expressing Simile. Of these the latter two are not the distinctive features of Upamā, but the first alone makes Upamā what it is. For in Upamā the strikingness lies in pointing out similarity between the upamāna and the upameya or in other words it is this relation which is sought to be primarily expressed. This is not so in Dṛṣṭānta. Hence the latter is separately treated.

Bhāmaha makes this more clear by giving an illustration (p. 71, l. 9): .The relation of sādhya and sādhana is not mentioned anywhere else than in Dṛṣṭānta [4]. Which is the sādhya and which is the sādhana, for example in "mukham indur iva" [5] (The face is like the Moon)? Here there is neither sādhya nor sādhana. If it were mentioned thus: 'The face is charming as it has a peculiar lustre, like the moon', it would rob the statement of its poetical charm and fail to attract the connoisseurs as it is laboured and ponderous.

But in the following illustration (p. 71, l. 12) of Dṛṣṭānta the mention of sādhya and sādhana is proper:—

"kalāv api bhavān iva / [6]

[6] (ibid) V. 57.

śreyān vṛddhānuśiṣṭatvāt pūrve Kṛta-yuge yathā //"

Here, the superiority of one who is praised is what is to be proved (sādhya), the reason (hetu) is, "being instructed by the vṛddhas," the example (dṛṣṭānta) is "people of Kṛta-yuga in the past."

(p. 72, l. 9) When the relation of sādhya and sādhana is welknown, the mere mention of the dṛṣṭānta may justify the conclusion (sādhya), for the sādhya and sādhana are suggested.[1] But when this relation is not welknown the use of the example (dṛṣṭānta) alone results in Neyārtha doṣa. The ill. is (p. 71, l. 23):

Bharatas tvaṁ Dilīpas tvaṁ tvaṁ evailaḥ Purūravāḥ /
tvam eva vīra Pradyumnas tvam eva Naravāhanaḥ //[2]

Here the conclusion that a particular king possesses certain qualities is not possible simply on account of the example. Hence it has Neyārtha-doṣa.

(x) (p. 72, l, 14) Bhāmaha's enumeration of doṣas contains 'Duṣṭaṁ' also— 'pratijñā-hetu-dṛṣṭānta-hīnaṁ duṣṭaṁ ca neṣyate'[3]

Therefore he gives illustrations of dūṣṭa-pada, duṣṭārtha, duṣṭa-vākya and duṣṭa-vākyārtha.

(p. 72, l. 14) According to Viveka B. K. L. v. 62 mentions two doṣas; (a) by the word 'unpleasant' (ahṛdya) Padārtha-doṣa is meant and (b) by the word 'heart-rending' (asunirbhedam)[4] Pada-doṣa is meant.

The ill. is (p. 72, l. 16):

prajānana-śreṣṭhi-variṣṭha-bhūbṛc chiro 'rcitāṅghreḥ pṛthu-kīrti-dhiṣṇya / ahighna-padmasya jalāri-dhāmnas tavaiva nānyasya sutasya vṛttam //[5]

In this verse the first half illustrates unplesantness (ahṛdyatva) and the second illustrates heart-rending (asu-nirbheda) phraseology.

2. (ibid) V. 59. According to Viveka this is a counter illustration of शुद्धदृष्टान्त and suffers from नेयार्थदोष (for contrary interpretation cf. उ. वृ. P. 126. Prof. Tatacharya takes this to be the ill. of शुद्धदृष्टान्त). Acc. to Viveka, B. K. L. V. 60, which comes after this ill. suggests that faulty expressions are employed by those who are chary of giving details. The remarks are taken to be satirical (उपहसन्नाह ।—P. 72, l. 12)

(c) Vākyārtha-doṣa [p, 72, l. 18]:

The ill. is [p. 72. l. 18];

saphala-sapallava-bhūri-cāru-vṛkṣe / bahu-kusuma-vibhūṣite sa tasthau sura-muni-siddha-yute Sumeru-pṛṣṭhe //[2]

This verse is overweighed with meretricious embellishments which do not essentially constitute the ornaments of poetry. Striking expression and choice phraseology constitute the real ornaments of poetry.[3] This verse does not inform us about the creation of the poet's genius, but it tells us about the Creator's creation.

(d) Vākya-doṣa [p. 72, l. 20]: Earlier it was pointed out that some poets are brief at the cost of clarity and consequently fall a prey to Neyārtha doṣa. Now the other extreme is discussed, that is, those who indulge in unnecessarily dilated expressions frought with impertinent words merely to complete the metre, and ultimately confound the sense.[4]

The ill. is not traceable in Viveka.[5]

Nirāgma-doṣa (p. 72, l. 24) according to Vāmana: If something enjoined by scriptures like Veda etc. is described without any regard to them, the Nirāgama doṣa arises'. The ill. is not traceable directly yet the following was undoubtedly the ill. in Kalpalatā:

4. अवध्यपदमस्वर्थं बहुपूरणमाकुलम् ।
कुर्वन्ति काव्यमपरे व्यायताभीप्सया (यथा) ।। (ibid) V.67. Mark the reading, it is अवध्यपदम् &c उ. वृ. has विरुद्धपदम्
5. Bhāmaha illustrates this at B. K. L. V. 68. These doṣas are given above according to Viveka. Prof. Tatacharya's interpretation of B. K. L. V. 62 to 68 at times differs from that of Viveka, which is not very clear.
6. Bhāmaha (B. K. L. IV. 4) and Daṇḍī (K. D. III. 163 & 176.) call this Āgama-virodhi, Bhoja follows Daṇḍī (S. K. I. 57). But his Āgama-virodhi is similar to Vāmana's Vidyā-virodhi. Hemacandra follows Vāmana, Viveka seems to follow Daṇḍī here, But the name is not common.

"That Brāhmin constantly performed Rājasūya and Aśva-medha sacrifices."[1] This is against the smṛti texts[2] which prescribe these sacrifices for the members of the warrior caste (kṣatriyas) only.

Vidyā-viruddha: (p. 72, l. 23): Vāmana defines this doṣa thus: Whatever is contrary to the sciences (śāstras) pertaining to arts and to the four human objectives [catur-varga] is called contrary to Learning [vidyā].[3]

(a) Kalā-śastra-virudhha/' (p. 72, l. 27):
'pūrṇa-sapta-svaraḥ so'yam bhinna-mārgaḥ pravartate'[4]

This is against the art of Music [gīta-kalā] for all the notes of the gamut cannot be consistently described along with Bhinna-mārga, when some notes are forbidden [varjya] and are to be studiously eliminated. Thus Binna-mārga and Pūrṇa-svara cannot co-exist, at the same time.

[b] & [c] The illustrations of Kāma-śāstra-viruddha and Artha-śāstra-viruddha are not traceable.[5]

(d) The ill. of Mokṣa-śāstra-viruddha:

"Salvation can be obtained through devotion to gods and not through the accumulation of right knowledge."[6]

This is against Mokṣa-śātra according to which Jñāna alone contributes to Salvation[7]

1. 'सततं सराजसूयैरीजे विप्रोऽश्वमेधैश्च ।' quoted by Hemacandra (P. 270).
2. The texts are quoted by Viveka (P. 72, l. 25); obviouosly borrowed from H. K. S. V. (P. 270)
3. Vāmana defines विद्याविरुद्ध thus: 'कलाचतुर्वर्गशास्त्रविरुद्धानि विद्याविरुद्धानि ।' (K.L.S. II. ii. 24). Viveka (P. 72, l. 26) follows K. L. S. Vṛtti on this sūtra which runs thus: 'कलाशास्त्रैश्चतुर्वर्गशास्त्रैश्च विरुद्धोऽर्थो येषुतानि &c ।' (P. 30).
4. This is Daṇḍī's ill. of गीतकलाविरुद्ध (vide K. D. III. 170). It is also borrowed by Bhoja, who gives it as an ill. of कामशास्त्रविरुद्ध (for कला is subservient to कामशास्त्र hence it is against a शास्त्र and therefore आगमविरोधी)
5. vide Vāmana K. L. S. V. (P. 30) 'अहंकारेण जीयन्ते द्विषन्तः किं नयश्रिया' which is borrowed by Hemacandra (H. K. S. 270, l. b). and Bhoja (S. K. I. v. 73-P. 48). Bhoja's ill. of Kāma-Śastra-viruddha is Daṇḍī's गीतकलाविरुद्ध as noted earlier. Hemacandra borrows the first half of Bhoja's ill. of कामशास्त्रविरुद्ध to illustrate that doṣa in his K. S. A. C. (vide p. 270, l. 9).
6. देवताभक्तितो मुक्तिर्न तत्त्वज्ञानसम्पदः । (Vāmana gives this ill. but he reads सम्पदा. vide. K. L. S. V. P. 31). Kalpalatā borrows from Hemacandra (P. 270). The verses are borrowed from Hemacandra (P. 270). The Gītā (VII. 6–7) reads अर्जुन for सदा. The remarks on these verses from the Gitā are borrowd by Viveka (P. 73, l. 7) from Hemacandra's Viveka (P. 271, l. 23). They are also found in Gopendra's Kāmadhenu.
7. Viveka (P. 72. l. 25) borrows from H. K. S. V. (P. 270, l. 24)

[e] Nyāya-virodhi (p. 73. l. 9) is treated. The ill. of this doṣa is:

Kāpilair asadudbhūtiḥ sthāna evopavarṇyate/asatām eva dṛśyante yasmād asmābhir udbhavāḥ//

This is against the sāṁkhya nyāya, according to which 'sat' alone is produced and not 'asat.'[1]

The exceptions to Nyāya-virodhi etc. seem to have been discussed here, they are borrowed from Bhoja.[2]

The exception to Kāma-śāstra-viruddha alone is traceable. Under certain conditions it becomes a guṇa:

dolātipreraṇa-trasta-vadhū-jana-mukhodgatam /[3] kāmināṁ laya-vaiṣaṁyād geyaṁ rāgam avardhayat //

Here the break in the harmony in time (laya) is caused by fear hence it augments the passion of the lovers; it is a guṇa.[4]

(10) Parivṛtta-niyama (p. 73, 1. 12).[4]: When some context calls for the specification (niyama) of some idea, which is not so specified, this doṣa arises.

The ill. is (p, 73, 1. 12):[5] yatrānullikhitākṣam eva nikhilaṁ nirmāṇam etad vidher utkarṣa-pratiyogi-kalpanam api nyakkāra-koṭiḥ-parā / yātāḥ prāṇabhṛtāṁ manoratha-gatir ullaṅghya yat sampadas tasyā "bhāsa-maṇīkṛtāśmasu maṇer aśmatvaṃ evocitam //

Here in the last line specification like—'chāyā-mātra-maṇīkṛtāśmasu maṇes tasya aśmataivocitā etc ' is expected, and yet it is not so done hence it is faulty.

1. The ill. of this doṣa is borrowed from K. D. (III, 175).
2. हेतुविद्यात्मको न्यायः । is भोज's definition of न्याय (S. K. I. 145). All these Kārikās (S. K. I. 159 cd to 156.) are borrowed from Daṇḍī's K. D. (III. 163 cd 164 and 179). Probably Kalpalatā quoted 'पूर्णसप्तस्वरः सोऽयं भिन्नग्रामः प्रवर्तते ।' as an ill. of कामशास्त्रविरोधि acc. to भोज (S. K. I. v 74-p. 48) as is indicated by the words: (p.73,l.9) न्यूनस्वरः । &c.
3. K. D. III. 182, ill. of कलाविरोधस्य गुणत्वम् । Bhoja (S. K. I. v. 204-p. 139) borrows this and calls it exception to कामशास्त्रविरुद्ध (because he includes कला in कामशास्त्र).
4. A new paragraph should begin from here.
5. This illustration is given by Hemacandra also (vide H. K. S. A. C.-P. 271). The remarks seem to have been borrowed by Kalpalatā from K. P. : अत्र च्छायामात्रमणीकृताश्मसु मणेस्तस्याश्मतैवोचितेति सनियमत्वं वाच्यम् । (P. 338). Hemacandra almost borrows this.

(11) Apada-yukta (p. 73, l. 15): [1] When some import is out of place (Apada) in a particular context, the Apada-yukta doṣa arises.

ājñā Śakra-śikhāmaṇi-praṇayinī utpattir Druhiṇānvaye ca tad aho nedṛg varo labhyate syāc ced eṣa na Rāvaṇaḥ kva nu punaḥ sarvatra sarve guṇāḥ // [2]

In this verse the latter half of the last quarter is out of place in this context, where Rāvaṇa is described. As it is unsuitable, it gives rise to a completely contrary sense.

(12) Sahacara-bhinna (p. 73, l. 17) [3] : When something of an inferior order is mentioned along with other things of a superior order or vice versa, this doṣa arises. The ill. is not traceable in Viveka. [4]

(13) Aślīlārtha (p. 73, l. 19.) Is it the exception to Aślīlārtha (S. K. I. 152) which is dealt with here? Under certain conditions Aślīla or Aślīlārthāntara becomes a guṇa. [5]

(14) Apārtha (p. 73, l. 21): [6] It is defined by Bhāmaha[7] thus:
samudāyārtha-śūnyaṁ yat tad apārthaṁ pracakṣate/

---

1. New paragraph from here. Another doṣa is discussed here onwards.
2. This ill. borrowed from K. P. (P. 341). Hemacandra quotes it to illustrate a रसदोष; (vide H. K. S. — P. 39).
3. New paragraph from here. Another doṣa is discussed here onwards.
4. Probably the ill. of this doṣa in Kalpalatā is :
श्रुतेन बुद्धिर्व्यसनेन मूर्खता मदेन नारी सलिलेन निम्नगा । निशा शशाङ्केन धृतिः समाधिना नयेन चालंक्रियते नरेन्द्रता ॥ (This is the ill. of सहचरभिन्न in K. P. (P. 343) and H. K. S. (P. 267). Here व्यसनेन मूर्खता, something inferior, is included among superior things. Hence the doṣa.
5. असभ्यार्थं यदश्लीलं तदर्थान्तरवाचि वा।
तस्येह दृश्यते भूम्ना प्रयोगो नापि दुष्यति ॥ S. K. I, 152. The ill. is S. K. I. v. 195. (P. 136). Does the original borrow here the remarks of Bhoja on this illustrations? They are: अत्राश्लीलार्थेऽपि कविभिरविगीतत्वाद्गुणत्वम् ॥ (op. cit. p. 136).
6. The discussion about Apārtha word or sentence, definition of a word (pada) and a sentence (vākya), definition of sentence according to the Buddhists &c. precedes the actual treatment of Apārthaka doṣa in Bhāmaha's Kāvyālaṁkāra. Mostly Kalplatā borrows this whole discussion. Probably 'विषं भुंक्ष्व ets' is an ill. of समुदायार्थ (vide K.P–p.215). The verse "अत्रापि बहुवक्तव्यम् &c" (B. K. L. IV. 7.) does not seem to have been rightly interpreted by Viveka. The interpretation by Prof. Tatacharya is more natural and correct (vide उ. वृ P. 83).
7. B. K. L. IV. 8 ab.

When a sentence does not possess a collective sense it is called Apārtha. The ill. is (p. 73, l. 27):

dāḍimāni daśāpūpāḥ ṣaḍ (ityādi yathoditam) /[1]

The other ill. (p. 73, l. 27) is from: Bhoja's S. K.:

iarad-gavaḥ kambala-pādukābhyāṁ dvāri sthito gāyati maṅgalāni / taṁ brāhmaṇī pṛcchati putra-kāmā rājan rumāyāṁ laśunasya ko'rthaḥ //[2]

Both these illustrations are without collective meaning, hence they are Apārthaka.

Apārthaka doṣa is so glaring a fault that even a novice would not commit it. It may be questioned, therefore, whether there is any justification in including Apārtha amongst the several doṣas of Poetry. Certain doṣas are eliminated by the definition of Poetry itself.[3] Others are eliminated by incorporating such attributes for Mahā-kāvyas, as 'nātivyākhyeyam' (such as does not need elaborate explanation i. e. to say not difficult to understand) &c.[4] Still other doṣas are eliminated by the inclusion of Ekārtha doṣa.[5] In short there remains nothing which Apārtha doṣa may seek to eliminate. If so the inclusion and treatment of this doṣa is quite needless.

Several view points forwarded for the vindication of the inclusion of Apārthaka amongst Kāvya-doṣas are rejected by Viveka as shown above. Viveka appreciates the force of the objection and accepts it, yet points out that the discussion of this doṣa is nonetheless needful inasmuch as it shows that Apārthābhāsa (semblance of meaninglessness) found in Prahelikās (Riddles) and so on, is not a doṣa though apārtha by itself is a doṣa, as is universably known.

(p. 77, l. 25) Exception to Apārtha-doṣa:

1. B. K. L. IV. 8. cd. अपार्थ is one of the निग्रहस्थानs (faults in arguments) according to Nyāya. (vide the definition of अपार्थ in न्या. सू. : पौर्वापर्यायोगादप्रतिसम्बद्धार्थम् । V. ii. 10.) The ill. in वात्सायन's भाष्य is दश दाडिमानानि &c. । (P. 521). 2. op. cit. I. v. 50.

3. 'शब्दार्थौ सहितौ काव्यम् । (ibid) I. 16. The reading of ख:—'काव्यलक्षणेन' is correct, the one accepted here (p. 76, l. 23) is quite wrong.

4. नातिव्याख्येयमृद्धिमत् । (ibid) I. 20. This of course applies to a Mahākāvya. But Viveka seems to extend its application to all poetry.

5. So illustrations like 'विकाशमीयुर्जगतीशमार्गणाः' (ill. of पंङ्क्तियमक in Bhāravi's किरात. XV. 52.) come under this (P. 75, l. 1).

When some one, muttering words conveying several imports, reflects upon these imports himself, the lack of syntactical construction of these several senses does not constitute a fault.[1]

The ill. is (p. 78, l. 2):

kusuma-bharaḥ sutarūṇām aho nu malayānilasya sevyatvam / sumanoharaḥ pradeśo rūpam aho sundaraṁ tasyāḥ //[2]

These are the words of a lover uttered to himself when he saw a young lady in the Malayodyāna.[3] Hence the words which appear to be disconnected and therefore meaningless, do not give rise to Apārtha-doṣa.

(15) Virasa (p. 78, l. 5) When a sentiment (rasa) not pertinent to the context, is introduced in the delineation of another, pertinent sentiment, this doṣa arises.[4]

The ill. is (p. 78, l. 14):

tava vana-vaso 'nucitaḥ pitṛ-maraṇa-śucaṁ vimuñca kiṁ tapasā / saphalaya yauvanam etat samam anuraktena sutanu mayā //[5]

These words are addressed by Hayagrīva's son to the beautiful daughter of Narakāsura, who was practising penance through grief due to her father's death at the hands of lord Viṣṇu. Here the Erotic sentiment is not pertinent, for the sentiment under depiction is Pathos; hence it is Virasa.

(15) Aprayukta doṣa (p. 78, l. 15)[6] : Vāmana, quoted here, defines it thus : māyādi.kalpitārtham aprayuktam/'[7] when a statement is contrived to perplex

विरसोऽसौ स च शक्यः सम्यग्ज्ञातुं प्रबन्धेभ्यः ॥ R. K. L. XI. 12.
5. [ibid] XI, 13. The words 'स्वयम् आर्यया &c' (P. 78, l. 14) refer to Rudraṭa who paraphrased this verse (Viveka p. 78, l. 10 ff), probably from हयग्रीववध into the Aryā metre at R. K. L. XI. 13. The introductory remarks to this verse in Viveka (P. 78, l. 6) are based on Namisādhu's Ṭippaṇi on R. K. L. XI. 13.
6. New paragraph from here. Another doṣa discussed here onwards.
7. V. K. L. S. II ii 21. I have followed the Nirṇaya Sāgara Edition of K. L. S. The name of this doṣa as available in V. K. L. S. II. ii. 9. and II. ii. 21. is Aprayukta. Dr, V. Raghavan reads, " Māyādi–vikalpitārtham ayuktam," Obviously he has followed some other edition of the work. The name of the doṣa there, is Ayukta. (Vide Bhoja's Sṛṅgāra-Prakāśa Vol. I. part II (p. 239).

others (by having recourse to verbal trickery), it is Aprayukta. The word 'māyā' in this context means 'trickery' or 'baffling others'; it does not mean 'illusion' or 'fantacy'. Vāmana has used this word in that sense elsewhere also'[1] The quotation from the Vīdagdha-mukha-maṇḍana [2] in Kāmadhenu also points to the same fact, for that work deals with enigmatic verses.

Under this Aprayukta come the various other enigmatic verses like Krīyā-gupta, Kāraka-gupta, Akṣara-cyutaka, Bindumati, Guḍha-caturtha, Praśnottara etc., which are illustrated in Sarasvatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa.[3] Kāvyānuśāsana,[4] Kāvya-kalpalatā [5] and Kalpalatā [6] our original work. According to Daṇḍī, quoted by Viveka (p. 78, l. 17), "as pastimes in festive gatherings, for the experts (in conundrums) to converse in crowded places and for puzzling others, Riddles (prahelīkās) are of use." [7]

IV Rasa–doṣas :

In this sub-section the doṣas pertaining to Rasa are treated. It was Dhvanikāra who first treated of Rasa-doṣas [8]. As already pointed out earlier, in Rudraṭa's Kāvyālaṁkāra we come across the Virasa doṣa [9] which is an Artha-doṣa according to him, though according to Dhvanyāloka it would be a Rasa-doṣa. In Dhvānyaloka nearly seven Rasa-doṣa are dealt with. Mammaṭa who almost borrows from it in his treatment of Rasa-doṣas gives ten doṣas [10]. He also gives the exceptional cases when doṣas cease to be so. Hemacandra specifically mentions eight doṣas of Rasa[11], but on the whole accepts ten doṣas.[12]

1. (vide) Vāmana's K. L. S. V. (p. 74) on K. L. S. IV. iii. 35, where व्याजोक्ति is otherwise called मायोक्ति [व्याज being equivalent to छद्म (and the latter to माया)]. 'Māyā,' even in V. K. L. S. II, ii. 21, does not mean 'illusion' or 'fantasy' as Dr. Raghavan has taken it to mean. He remarks, "Perhaps Vāmana refers to illusions and fantasies in which incoherent things happen" (B. S. Pr. K. Vol. I. pt. II–p. 239). We submit very humbly that the interpretation of this Doṣa in Viveka seems to be more convincing. Māyā is taken to mean 'परव्यामोहन', 'puzzling others.' Daṇḍī uses this word in a similar context (vide K. D. III. 97, also Bhoja's S. K. II. 134).
2. The verse, "प्राहुर्व्यस्तं समस्तं च द्विर्व्यस्तं द्विःसमस्तकम् । तथा व्यस्तसमस्तं च द्विर्व्यस्तकस्मस्तकम् ।। विदग्ध० मु. म. (P. 2) is not obscure as Dr. V. Raghvan notes. (B. S. Pr- K. Vol. I pt. II–P. 239). It is the first of the ten verses enumerating the varieties o enigmatic verses illustrated in the work.
3. S. K. II. (p. 297 ff.).
4. H. K. S. V. (p. 315 ff); only some are illustrated.
5. K. K. L. V. (p. 85).
6. op. cit. III. (p. 227).
7. K. D. III. 97.
8. ध्व. III and I. Six doṣas are specifically given in the IIIrd and one is indirectly treated in the I^st^ chapter.
9. R. K. L. XI. 12.
10. K. P. VII. 12–14.
11. H. K. S. III. 3.
12. Two more are given at H. K. S. III. 1&2

Viveka has treated of ten doṣas of Rasa. In this sub-section both Kalpalatā and Viveka draw upon Dhvanyāloka and Locana. At one place Viveka clearly acknowledges its debt to Dhvanikāra. At times Mammaṭa and Hemcandra are drawn upon.

(1) Svaśabda-vācyatā (P. 78, 1. 27). The mention by name of Vyabhicāris, Rasas and Sthāyibhāvas results in a doṣa[1]. The ill. of this doṣa is not traceable.

The ill. of the exception is:

yāte dvāravatīṁ tadā madhu-ripau tad-datta-jhaṁpānatāṁ Kālindī-taṭa-ruḍhavañjula-latām āliṅgya sotkaṇṭhayā / tad gītaṁ guru-bāṣpa-gadgada-galat-tāra-svaraṁ Rādhayā yenāntarjala-cāribhir jala-carair apy utkam utkūjitam //

(2) Kaṣṭa-kalpanā (p. 78, 1. 28): When the anubhāvas and vibhāvas are not easily recognisable this daṣa arises. The ill. is borrowed from K. P. (p. 78, 1. 28)[2]:

karpūra-dhūli-dhavala-dyuti-pūra-dhauta-diṅmaṇḍale śiśira-rociṣi tasya yūnaḥ / līlā-śiroṅśuka-niveśa-viśeṣa-klṛpti-vyakta-stanonnatir abhun nayanāvanau sā //

Here the excitants (moon-rise etc.) of Śṛṅgāra do not contribute to the easy apprehension of the Anubhāvas.

(3) Pratikūla-vibhāvādi-grahaḥ (p. 79, 1. 4)[3]: The introduction of contrary excitants etc. is a doṣa. The ill. (p. 80, 1. 19) is:

durvārāḥ smara-margaṇāḥ priyatamo dūre mano 'tyutsukaṁ gāḍhaṁ prema navaṁ vayo 'tikaṭhināḥ prāṇāḥ kulaṁ nirmalam / strītvaṁ dhairya-virodhi manmatha-suhṛt kālaḥ kṛtānto 'ksamaḥ no sakhyaś caturāḥ kathaṁ nu virahaḥ soḍhavya itthaṁ śaṭhaḥ //[4]

Here the words 'kṛtānto 'ksamaḥ' indicate aversion to wordly desires and are, therefore, contrary to the Śṛṅgāra.

1. The words 'नानर्थकः &c are borrowed by Kalpalata from Locana : सोत्कण्ठाशब्दः केवलं सिद्धं साधयति, उत्कमित्यनेन तूक्तानुभावाकर्षणं कर्तुं सोत्कण्ठाशब्दः प्रयुक्त इत्यनुवादोऽपि नानर्थकः etc. ॥ लो० (p. 82) [vide also H. K. S. (p. 160); also H. K. S. V. (P. 160); Viveka borrows from H. K. S. V.]

2. The words अनुभावापर्यवसायिनः &e. in the original are borrowed from K. P. अत्रोद्दीपनालम्बनरूपाः शृंगारयोग्या विभावा अनुभावापर्यवसायिनः स्थिता इति कष्टकल्पना । (P. 367) (उद्योत also reads अपर्यवसायिनः). Hemacandra borrows from K. P. but he calls this doṣa kleśa-vyakti. The remarks in Viveka are borrowed from H. K. S. V. (P.170). Māṇikyacandra also here borrows from Hemacandra's Viveka. He also resorts to partially paraphrasing Viveka of Hemacandra (vide Kāvya-prakāśa-saṅketa-p. 175).

3. Viveka notes that some of these doṣas are treated by the author of K. P. and are based on their treatment in Dhvanyāloka.

4. This verse is quoted in K. P. as an ill. of the figure Samuccaya (vide K. P. X.-P. 533).

Exception to this dosa (p. 80, l. 26):[1] When the Rasa sought to be delineated is already established, the mention of foils (bādhya) is not objectionable.

The illustrations are: (i) (p. 80, l. 19).

kvā kāryaṁ śaśa-lakṣmaṇaḥ kva ca kulaṁ bhuyo 'pi dṛśyeta sā doṣāṇāṁ praśamāya me śṛtam aho kope 'pi kāntaṁ mukhaṃ/kiṁ vaksyanty apakalaṁṣāḥ kṛtadhiyaḥ svapne 'pi sā durlabhā, cetaḥ svāsthyam upaiḥ, kaḥ khalu yuvā dhanyo 'dharaṁ dhāsyati [2] ||

Here the contrary vyabhicāris work as foils to Śṛṅgāra, the pertinent sentiment, hence bring it to a bolder relief.

The other ill. is (p. 80, l. 24):[3] (ii) The description of the advice of the second young ascetic to Puṇḍarīka, who was deeply in love with Mahāśvetā.

Such a contradiction is objectionable either when the contrary Rasa becomes naturally subordinate to the main as in (p. 81, l. 4):

"bhramim aratim alasa-hṛdayatām" or when it is artificially subordinated to it as in (p. 81, l. 11):

"pāṇḍu kṣāmaṁ vadanaṁ hṛdayaṁ sarasaṁ etc."

Here 'paleness' (pāṇḍutā) etc. are common to the sentiment of Love-in-separation as well as to consumption (ksetriya-roga).

The other ill: is (p. 81, l. 11):

"kopāt komala-lola-bāhu-latikā-pāśena baddhvā dṛḍham etc./"

Here 'tying tightly etc.' are the anubhāvas of Raudra yet not objectionable to Śṛṅgāra on account of the suggested Metaphor which is not carried to its extreme.[1] (p. 81, l. 23). In the former ill. "Pāṇḍu kṣāmaṁ vadanaṃ" etc. the necessary ancillaries of Pathos which are irrelevant to Love-in-separation should be avoided. For instance, mention of death is irrelevant there, unless the re-union is ere long to occur.

1. Dhvanikārikā III. 20. (P. 365).
2. This ill. is borrowed from Dhvanyāloka (P. 367). Mammaṭa also borrows the same (vide K. P–P 373). The words, 'चिन्ताया एव प्रधानताम् etc. (P. 80, l. 19) are borrowed by the original from Locana, "अत्र हि वितर्कौत्सुक्ये मतिस्मरणे...परस्परं बाध्यबाधकभावेन द्वन्द्वशो भवन्ती, पर्यन्ते तु चिन्ताया एव प्रधानतां ददती परमास्वादस्थानम् ।" (P. 177). Viveka seems to differ from Abhinava and points out that this is an ill. of the exception to the rivalry of वीर and शृङ्गार and not the ill. of भावशबलता.
3. The original borrows from ध्व० : यथा वा पुण्डरीकस्य महाश्वेतां प्रति प्रवृत्तनिर्भरानुरागस्य द्वितीयमुनिकुमारोपदेशवर्णने । ध्व० (P. 368).

(p. 81, l. 17) Sometimes mention of death does not interfere with delineation of the Erotic sentiment when the poet has genius enough to depict it rightly, e.g.

tirthe toya-vyatikara-bhave jahnu-kanyā-saravyor deha-tyāgād amara-gaṇanā-lekhyam āsādya sadyaḥ | pūrvā-''kārā-'dhikatara-rucā saṁgataḥ kāntayā-'sau lilāgareṣv aramata punar nandanābhyantareṣu ||[2]

Here the death of Aja is mentioned, yet his union with his beloved is described immediately hence the mention of death becomes an ancillary of the sentiment of Love-in-separation.

(p. 81, l. 25) In the following verse ancillaries of Erotic sentiment serve as a foil to enhance the beauty of Śānta, the relevant rasa in the verse:

satyaṁ manoramā rāmāḥ satyaṁ ramyā vibhūtayaḥ |
kintu mattāṅganā'pāṅga-bhaṅga-lolaṁ hi jīvitam ||[3]

1, The remarks (P. 81, l. 11) are borrowed from Locana (P. 368). The original (P. 81, l. 13) borrows from ध्वन्यालोक : तदङ्गानामेवादोषो नातदङ्गानाम् । (P. 366); Viveka borrows from Locana. At P. 81, l. 14, ध्वन्यालोक is drawn upon : आश्रयविच्छेदे रसस्यात्यन्तविच्छेदप्राप्तेः । ध्वन्यालोक (P. 366); Viveka borrows from Locana. At P. 81, l. 16, ध्व. and लोचन are drawn upon. Both these read काव्यार्थत्वम् (op. cit. P. 366). At P. 81, l. 17 ध्वन्यालोक is drawn upon : शृङ्गारे वा मरणस्यादीर्घकालप्रत्यापत्तिसम्भवे कदाचिदुपनिबन्धो नात्यन्तविरोधी । ध्व० (P. 366). At P. 81, l. 22. Locana is drawn upon : अत्र करुणोचितः व्याधिः श्लेषभङ्गया स्थापितः । लो० (P. 368).

2. This is Raghu. VIII. 95. It is quoted in लो० (P. 366). cf, 'अत एव सुकविना मरणे पदबन्धमात्रं न कृतम् ।' Locana (P. 366). These words are obviously borrowed by the original (vide Viveka–P. 81, l. 21).

3. According to ध्व० and लो० here the ancillary of Śṛṅgāra is introduced either to attract the attention of those who are to be instructed (vineyān) or to lend exquisite charm to the poem; hence there is no doṣa. Mammaṭa does not accept these explanations (vide K. P.–P 375). According to him the tremulousness of the side glances is the welknown उपमान here and as such, it nourishes Śānta cf 'प्रसिद्धभंगुरोपमानतया उपात्तं शान्तमेव पुष्णाति ।' (also cf H. K.S.–P. 162. l. 11–12.) and 'शान्तशृंगारयोः नैरन्तर्याभावात् ।' K. P,–(P. 375)

(p. 82, l. 6) [1] If a sentiment is opposed to the main sentiment when these two abide in a common substratum, the former should be made to have a distinct substratum.

(p. 82, l 9) [2] When a sentiment is opposed to the main, if it follows closely upon the latter, a third rasa should be made to intervene between these two to avoid fault.

(p. 82, l 14) to (p 83, l. 24) [3]: Here is given a long discussion on the vindication of Śānta, which is wholly borrowed by the original from Dhvanyāloka, and from Locana by Viveka.

(p. 83, l. 27) [4] This doṣa (of contradiction) can be avoided not merely in a consistent and whole composition (Prabandha) but also in a sentence.

(p. 84, l. 1-2) Dhvanyāloka III, 27. is quoted to corroborate the above Kārikā from Kāvya-prakāśa. In the ill. the heroic sentiment is introduced between the sentiments of Loathing (Bībhatsa) and of Love (Śṛṅgāra), which are contradictory. Here the bodies of the dead heroes are described along with their heavenly recompense in the form of close embraces from celestial nymphs. [5]

(p. 84, l, 12) The mention of a sentiment contrary to the pertinent principal Rasa is harmless if (i) it is evoked through reminiscence, or (ii) it is sought to be equipollent with the main Rasa, or (iii) the two contrary Rasas are subordinated to the principal Rasa. [6]

The ill. of (i) above is not traceable. [1]

The ill. of the second is (p. 84, l. 12):

danta-kṣatāni karajaiś ca vipāṭitāni prodbhinna-sāndra-pulake bhavataḥ śarīre |
dattāni rakta-manasā mṛga-rāja-vadhvā jātaspṛhair munibhir apy avalokitāni ||

Here Śānta and Śṛṅgāra are equipollent, hence faultless. [2]

The illustration of the third is:

krāmantyaḥ kṣata-komalāṅguli-valad raktaiḥ sadarbhāḥ sthalīḥ, pādaiḥ pātitayāvakair iva patad bāṣpāmbu-dhautānanāḥ | bhītā bhartṛ-karāvalambita-karās tvacchatru-nāryo'dhunā, dāvāgniṁ parito bhramanti punarapy udyad-vivāhā iva || [3]

Here both, the Erotic and the Pathetic Rasas are subordinated to the emotion (bhāvā) of devotion (Rati) for the king, hence there is no fault.

(p 84, l. 17) Here a question is posed as to how this contradiction goes away when the two contradictory Rasas are subordinated (anyaparatve) to the main [4].

The reply (not actually traceable in Viveka) is: Such an opposition is objectionable in a positive injunction (vidhi) and not in a mere explanatory repetition (anuvāda). [5]

The ill. is (p. 85, l. 2):

ehi gaccha patottiṣṭha veda maunaṁ samācara |
evam āśā-graha-grastaiḥ krīḍanti dhanino'rthibhiḥ || [6]

Here 'come' (ehi) and 'go' (gaccha) etc, are contradictory between themselves but are not so in relation to 'krīdanti (play), for they are mere explanatory repetitions (anuvāda), illustrating the manner in which the rich play with the hopefully expectant supplicants [7]. Such a relation of vidhi and anuvāda may also exist between Rasas, in the same way as it does between the import of a sentence (vākyārtha) and the expressed sense (vācya), which suggest the Rasa[1].

---

[1] The ill. is, "अयं स रसनोत्कर्षी पीनस्तनविमर्दकः । नाभ्यूरुजघनस्पर्शी नीविविस्रंसनः करः॥" quoted from the Mahābhārata, in ध्व० (P. 377), K. P. (P. 378) and H. K. S. (P. 152).

[2] According to Viveka in this verse Śṛṅgāra and Śānta are on the same footing. Some commentators of K. P. do take this verse to be the ill. of sāmya. Udyota and Pradīpa (op. cit. P, 379) think that here Sṛngāra is subordinate to Śānta. Hemacandra is also of the same opinion (vide H. L. S.–P. 167, l. 14).

[3] Quoted in K. P. (P. 379). The original (P. 84. l. 12) borrows from K. P., "अत्र चाटुके राजविषया रतिर्या प्रतीतयते &c। K. P. (P. 379). The reading 'तुच्छंतु' etc is not correct, it should be त्वच्छत्रु, as in ms. ग.

[4] Original borrows from ध्व० : अन्यपरत्वेऽपि विरोधिनोः कथं विरोधनिवृत्तिः &c/ (P. 369)

[5] विधौ विरोधसमावेशे दोषः नानुवादे ॥ ध्व. (P. 369).

[6] The verse is quoted in ध्व. (P. 371), K. P. (P. 383) & H. K. S. (P. 165)

[7] The original borrows from ध्व. "एवं विध्यनुवादनयाश्रयेणात्र श्लोके परिहृतस्तावद्विरोधः ।" (P. 375).

Sometimes when in order to describe the extraordinary prowess of the hero, the Pathos of his antagonists is described it does not offend the critics, but on the contrary gives rise to delight.[2] The ill. is (p. 85, l. 3):

> kurabaka kucāghāta-krīdā-sukhena viyujyase bakula-viṭapin smartavyaṁ te > mukhasava-sevanam / > caraṇa-ghaṭanā-śūnyo yāsyasy aśoka saśokatām iti nija-pura-tyāge yasya > dviṣāṁ jagaduḥ striyaḥ //[3]

In the same way, in "krāmantyaḥ kṣata &c", Karuṇa and Śṛṅgāra are subordinated to Rati, hence not objectionable.

(p. 85, l. 10) The lack of contradiction can be explained in another way. Śṛṅgāra may be taken to be subordinate to Karuṇa and the latter supported by the former reinforces the main import of this verse.[4]

After discussing the method of introducing antagonistic Rasas, the rule for depicting them in a whole and consistent composition (prabandha) is dealt with.

(p. 85, l. 24) A whole composition may as per convention contain several sentiments, but one of them should be made the principal. Such depiction of other sentiments is unobjectionable (p. 86, l. 11) in the same way as a play has a single main and pervading action though it does contain several incidental scenes.

1. The original here (P. 84, l. 18) borrows from ध्व., "वाक्यार्थस्य वाच्यस्य च यौ विध्यनुवादौ तौ तदाक्षिप्तानाम् रसानां केन वार्यते ।" (P. 372).
2. The whole passage (P. 84, l. 19 to P. 85, l. 1.) is borrowed by the original mutatis mutandis from Locana (P. 374), for the original discusses "क्रामन्त्यः क्षत &c" whereas Locana discusses "क्षिप्तो हस्तावलग्नः &c."
3. This verse is quoted in Locana (P. 375).
4. The words परतस्तु &c (P. 85, l. 11 to 19). are borrowed from H. K. S. V. (P. 166, l 24), where they are borrowed from K. P. (P. 381). The verse, 'गुणः कृतात्म॰ &c" is also quoted in Locana (P. 379). But there it is introduced with the words, "यथाह तत्रभवान्," while in K. P. it is introduced with the words, 'उक्तं हि." The rule laid down in "गुणः कृतात्मसंस्कारः &c" is an exception to "गुणानाञ्च परार्थत्वात् &c" (discussed above-P. 40). According to this exception when subordinates are not on an equal footing there may exist between them the relation of principal and subordinate. Here Karuṇa is beautified by Śṛṅgāra due to the Utprekṣā, hence it is principal in relation to Śṛṅgāra, which is also indirectly or remotely subordinate to the main, while Karuṇa is directly subordinate to it.

(p. 86, l. 17) It is possible to imagine the relation of principal and subsidiary between two Rasas which are not opposed to each other. One may ask as to how it is possible between two opposed Rasas.

The reply is that it is quite possible by having recourse to several methods which enable one to avoid this antagonism:

(p. 87, l. 25) (i) Whether opposed or not a sentiment which is not the principal should not be fully developed, that is to say, the Rasa other than the principal should not outdo the latter from the standpoint of depiction. The ill. is (p. 87, l. 1):

ekato roditi priyā anyato samara-tūrya nirghoṣaḥ / snehena raṇa-rasena ca bhaṭasya dolāyitaṁ hṛdayam // [1]

Here the emotions of love (rati) and of fortitude (utsāha) are equally developed, hence there is no fault.

This method of avoiding contradiction may be employed in whole compositions as well as it is in stray verses.

(p. 87, l, 11) (ii) The fleeting feelings (vyabhicāris) belonging to the opposed Rasa should not be described at length and if at all described they should be immediately followed by the fleeting emotions belonging to the main Rasa. [2]

The ill. is:

kopāt komala-lola-bāhu-latikā-pāśena baddhvā dṛḍhaṁ nītvā vāsa-niketanaṁ dayitayā sāyaṁ sakhīnām puraḥ / bhūyo naivam iti skhalat kala-girā saṁsūcya duśceṣṭitaṁ dhanyo hanyata eva ninhuti paraḥ preyān rudatyā hasan //

Here the vyabhicāris of Krodha (anger), which is opposed to Rati (love), are described at length but the vyabhicāris of Rati immediately follow with words 'rudatyā' (crying) and 'hasan' (smiling). [3]

(p. 87, l. 14) (iii) When a subordinate sentiment is developed fully, it should be kept subordinate by constant circumspection. The ill. is Vatsa-rājaś Love-in union (sambhoga Śṛṅgāra) for Vāsavadattā in Tāpasavatsaraja, [4]

(4) Paunaḥ-punyena-dīpanam (p. 88, l. 17): Frequent elucidation of a sentiment which is already fully developed involves a doṣa. [5]

(10) Prakṛti-viparyaya: This is the tenth doṣa given by Mammaṭa. It is not traceable here. Probably it was not at all treated in the original as this is included under pada-doṣas[5] (vide Viveka—p. 9, l. 14).

(p. 90, l. 1) Viveka quotes remarks from the original viz "evam anye'pi" etc, i.e. to say, "thus others also." These words followed by the comments of Viveka on them indicate that Kalpalatā did not follow Mammaṭa quite closely in its treatment of Rasa-doṣas. Some of the Rasa-doṣas viz, Akāṇḍa-ccheda, Aṅgino'nanusandhāna, Prakṛti-viparyaya etc. are not traceable here. Mammaṭa treats of ten Rasa-doṣas. If Kalpalatā dealt with all these ten then the words, "evam anye'pi" indicate that it included other doṣas too.[6] For Viveka actually treats of Vṛttyanaucitya a Rasa-doṣa dealt with in Dhvanyāloka (p. 364).

(p. 90, l. 2) Vṛttyanaucitya lies in impropriety with reference to Vṛtti which is taken to mean (i) deportment (vyavahāra) (ii) varieties of

2. This Rasa-doṣa is not traceable in Viveka though it was positively dealt with in the original as is clear from Viveka (P. 88, l. 17).
3. Not traceable in Viveka.
4. The reading at P. 88, l. 21 should be 'अङ्गातिविस्तृतिः' The original borrows from ध्व. (P. 335) and Viveka from Locana (P. 335), Note the reading : स्थितिमिति कथाशय्याम् । लो. reads 'यथा शय्याम्'
5. Hemacandra includes it under Rasa doṣa (vide H. K. S–P. 109& 178).
6. Hemacandra includes देशकालादिसमुचितवेषव्यवहारविरुद्ध under रसदोषs; he points out that whatever is against propriety with regard to deśa etc involves doṣa. This is treated as an Artha-doṣa by Rudraṭa (vide R. K. L. X. L. 9) Viveka also treats it as an Artha doṣa (vide Viveka P. 27, l. 20) Both Hemacandra (H. K. S. diction as found in dramatic compositions or (iii) various styles of poetical compositions.[1]

(II) Guṇa-vivecauam (P. 91, l. 1.)

In this section (pariccheda) guṇas (excellences) of Poetry are dealt with. The definition of guṇas of Kāvya is not traceable in Viveka. According to Vāmana guṇas are properties which give rise to the beauty of Poetry (kāvya-śobhā).[2]

Both alaṁkāras and guṇas heighten the charm of Poetry. There is a controversy regarding the distinction between the two. According to Vāmana guṇas give rise to beauty, which is augmented by alaṁkāras.[3] According to Dhvanyāloka and the followers of Dhvani school guṇas are the intrinsic and inherent qualities of Rasa and bear same relation to Poetry as the qualities like valour (śaurya) etc. bear to the body, for they too inhere in the soul.[4] The guṇas, therefore, stand in vivid contrast to the alaṁkāras (both of sound and sense) which belong to the body of Poetry and not to Rasa its soul, in the same way as the ornaments belong to the body and not to the soul. Mammaṭa[5] and Hemacandra[6] follow this view. There are some who do not believe in such a distinction between guṇas and alaṁkāras, which according to them are on the same footing, the supposed distinction being rather conventional than real.[7]

It does not seem proper to suppose that Daṇḍī does not make any distinction between guṇas on the one hand and alaṁkāras on the other,[8] for the following reasons:

(i) He calls śleṣa etc, the guṇas of Vaidarbha mārga, while he speaks of svabhāvākhyāna etc. as alaṁkriyāḥ.[9]

(ii) He does not refer to guṇas as alaṁkāras at K. D. II. 3. The word 'alaṁkriyāh' there refers to the three figures of sound viz.

Śṛtyanuprāsa, Vṛtyanuprāsa and Yamaka, which are mentioned by him during his treatment of guṇas, in order to illustrate the distinction between the two styles Vaidarbha and Gauḍa. These alaṁkāras are treated in the first section of the Kāvyādarśa not because Daṇḍī did not want to discriminate between guṇas and alaṁkāras but because he wanted to bring out the glaring contrast between the two mārgas even in the use figures of sound like Śṛtynanuprāsa and Vṛtyanuprāsa.

(iii) According to him guṇas are the very life of Vaidarbha-mārga,[2] whereas alaṁkāras are the properties which beautify Kāvya.[3]

(iv) It is true that he calls Bhāvika a guṇa, just as Bhāmaha does. But here Daṇḍī is quoting others and mentions it at the end of his treatment of Alaṁkāras, probably suggesting that he does not accept the view though he mentions it through deference for others.[4] He considers it to be an alaṁkāra as suggested by the words "whatever is described as sandhyaṅgas etc. in another science[5] is also (ca)[6] considered to be just (eva) alaṁkara by us."[7] This emphasis on 'alaṁkāratayā' points out that even Bhāvika is considered, by Daṇḍī, to be an alaṁkāra and not a guṇa.[8]

Bhoja distinguishes between guṇas and alaṁkāras and points out that a poem though embellished by figures of speech is not pleasant to the ear unless it possesses excellences.[9]

1. These are called alaṁkāras by Dandī even at the end of their treatment. 'कामं सर्वोप्यलंकारः रसमर्थे निषिञ्चति । &e' K. D. I. 62. He means that all the alaṁkāras—whether of sound like अनुप्रास &e or of sense like उपमा etc.—make the import pleasurable by heightening its beauty.

6. The cakāra conveys aggregation (samuccaya) indicating that not merely भाविक but also Sandhyaṅgas ete are considered as alaṁkāras by Daṇḍī.
7. 'eva' meaning 'just' indicates that these viz sandhyaṅgas etc including (ca) Bhāvika are treated as only alaṁkāras.
8. Even towards the end of the 3rd chapter Daṇḍī clearly distinguishes between alaṁkāras and guṇas. Not merely this he also distinguishes between Arthālaṁkāras and Śabdā-laṁkāras (vide K. D. III. 186 : शब्दार्थालंक्रियाश्चित्रमार्गाः सुकरदुष्कराः । गुणा दोषाश्च काव्यानामिह संक्षिप्य दर्शिताः ॥) The words अलंक्रिया & अलंकार used at K. D. III. 187 and 141 respy. mean भूषण' in the general and popular sense just as मम्मट uses the word गुण in the sense of भूषण in K. P. VII, when a doṣa ceases to be one under exceptional circumstances.
9. S. K. I. 59 cf K. L. S. V. on III i.3. also vide S. K.—P. 703 ff and Sr. Pr.—P. 435 ff where Bhoja undoubtedly distinguishes between guṇas and alaṁkāras.

The controversy regarding the distinction between guṇas and alaṁkāras is given in Kāvyaprakāśa and borrowed by the original, that is Kalpalatā, and also its Pallava, as will be shown later.

There is again a controversy regarding the number of guṇas. Bharata enumerates ten guṇas in his Nāṭya-śāstra.[1] Daṇḍī also gives the same number.[2] Bhāmaha deals with three viz. Madhura, Ojas and Prasāda.[3] Vāmana treats of ten guṇas each of sound (śabda) and sense (artha).[4] According to him guṇas are indispensable for the charm of Poetry.[5] Dhvanyāloka treats of three guṇas only viz. those given by Bhāmaha, though Ānandavardhara does not accept Bhāmaha's definition of Madhura.[6] Mammaṭa and Hemacandra follow suit. They also try to show that the remaining guṇas as they are called, are either included under these three or can be achieved by avoidance of doṣas hence do not deserve to be called guṇas. Bhoja divides guṇas into bāhya (extrinsic), ābhyantara (intrinsic) and vaiśeṣika (extraordinary). The first variety depends on śabda (sound), the second on artha (sense), whereas the last consists of doṣas transformed into guṇas due to exceptional circumstances.[7] Each of these varieties has twentyfour guṇas under it.[8]

Kalpalatā probably follows Bhāmaha, Dhvanikāra[9] and Mammaṭa[10], and accepts only three guṇas viz. Mādhurya, Ojas and Prasāda. But the guṇas of śabda and artha are treated of here in two separate sections.[11]

(1) Mādhurya (Madhura) (P. 91, l. 1): It is defined by Bhāmaha thus: Whatever is agreeable to the ears and does not have many compounded words or compact sense is Madhura (sweet).[12] This definition of Madhura is not accepted by Dhvanikāra[13] who points out that śravyatva is common to Floridity (Ojas) also.

(2) Ojas (P. 91, l. 11) : Vāmana[2] defines this guṇa thus: Compactness of composition (or style) is Floridity (Ojas). The ill. of Ojas is: (p. 91, l. 17) vilulitamarkarandā mañjarīr nartayantī'/. Viveka points out that in this ill. Ojas is tempered with a sprinkling of Śaithilya (looseness) and it contains Prasāda also. Pure Floridity is illustrated at (p, 91, l. 21):

dor daṇḍāñcita-candra-śekhara-dhanur daṇḍāvabhaṅgodyataḥ etc. /

where there is pure Floridity, unmixed with Perspicuity (Prasāda).

(P. 91, l. 25) Daṇḍi defines Ojas thus: "Floridity consists in a super-abundance of compounds. That is of manifold varieties in accordance with the profusion or sparceness of heavy or of light syllables or with (an equal) mixture of them...."[3]

The ill is (p- 91, l. 26):

asta-mastaka-paryasta-samstārkāṁśu-saṁstarā /
pīna-stana-sthitātāmra-kamra-vastreva vāruṇī[4] //

(p. 91, l, 27) The Gauḍas employ Floridity even in verse, but the Vaidarbhas also indulge in Ojas if it contributes to charm and does not get involved.[5]

(3) Prasāda (p. 92, l 1) : Mammaṭa defines Prasāda (Perspicuity) thus: That is the quality of perspicuity whereby the meaning is comprehended as soon as the words are heard: it is common to all (Rasas and styles).

(p. 92, l, 4) Perspicuity is defined as 'looseness' by Vāmana[7]. It may be argued[8] that this is a doṣa as it is contrary to Ojas (Floridity), (for Vāmana defines doṣa as guṇa-viparyayātmā i. e. whatever is contrary to a guṇa is a doṣa). The reply[9] is that it is a guṇa as it is blended with Floridity (Ojas), though pure looseness would be a blemish. The blending of the two is a matter proved by experience. Floridity

(Ojas) and looseness (Prasāda) can co-exist in the same way as pleasure and pain do in pathetic plays.[1]

(p. 92, l. 10) The proportion of these two, Ojas and Prasāda, is prescribed thus: Looseness and Floridity may either be equipollent, or the one or the other may preponderate.

The ill. of sāmya of the two is (p. 92, l. 11): [2] atha sa viṣaya-vyāvṛttātmā yathā-vidhi sūnave / nṛpati-kakudaṁ dattvā yūne sitātapa-vāraṇam // &c where nṛpati-kakudam, sitātapa &c, contain looseness and dattvā, yūne, vāraṇam contain Floridity.

The ill. of the preponderance of Floridity is (p. 92, l. 12):

vrajati gaganaṁ bhallātakyāḥ phalena sahopamām /

Daṇḍī's view on Prasāda guṇa is given at (p. 92, l. 13). The definition and ill. of Prasāda given by Daṇḍī are not traceable.

The Gauḍas prefer even what is not conventional, thinking it to be an enlightened or learned way.[3] The ill. is;

'unaty-arjunā'bjanma-sadṛkṣāṅko valakṣaguḥ [4] ' /

(p. 92, l. 17) Bharata defines Prasāda thus: When the sense is comprehended from word by the wise without its being specified, on account of the happy relation of sound and sense, it is called Prasāda.[5]

(p. 92, l. 17) According to Mammaṭa some of the several guṇas admitted by others, are included in these three mentioned above viz. Prasāda, Ojas and Mādhurya; others are achieved by mere avoidance of blemish and the rest actually become blemishes in certain cases, hence guṇas are only three and not ten.[6]

   Thus श्लेष, समाधि and उदारता are included in ओजस् ; अर्थव्यक्ति in प्रसाद; सौकुमार्य and कान्ति can be achieved respy., by the avoidance of the doṣas कष्टत्व and ग्राम्यत्व. And समता which is nothing but uniformity of style (मार्गाभेदरूपा) is some time a doṣa e.g. in 'मातङ्गा &c' it would be a doṣa.

(4) Śleṣa (p. 92. l. 19): The definition Śleṣa given by Daṇḍī is negative: "Cohesineness (śleṣa) is what does not involve Looseness."[1] "Looseness or Śaithilya is what mainly consists of faintly—aspirated syllables."[2] The ill of Śithila is:

(p. 92, l. 19) "mālalī-mālā-lolāli-kalilā"[3]

Vāmana defines Śleṣa thus (p. 19, 20):

'masṛṇatvaṁ śleṣaḥ /' III. i. 11.

(5) Samatā (p. 92, l. 29): Vāmana defines it as the consistency or uniformity of style (mārgā 'bhedaḥ).[4] But Mammaṭa points out that sometimes uniformity in style becomes a doṣa. e.g. in mātaṅgāḥ kīmu valgitaiḥ kim aphalair āḍambarair jambukāḥ sāraṅgā mahiṣā madaṁ vrajata kiṁ śūnyeṣu śūrā na ke // kopāṭopa-samudbhoṭotkaṭa-saṭā-koṭer ibhāreḥ puraḥ sindhudhvānini huṁkṛte spurati yat tad garjitaṁ garjitam //

Here the soft style in the first two lines is changed into harsh in the last, yet the beauty is heightened by this change. The uniformity would have been a blemish here.

(p. 92, l. 29) Daṇḍī's definition of Samatā (Evenness) is: 'samaṁ bandheṣv aviṣamam /'[5]. Absence of unevenness of structure (bandha) is Evenness (samatā): The ill. of Evenness is:

"candana—praṇayodgandhi mando malaya-mārutaḥ //"[6].

The other ills. are not traceable.

(6) Samādhi (p. 93, l. 10): Vāmana defines this thus: "ārohāvaroha-kramaḥ samādhiḥ /"[7] graduated rise from soft to harsh or fall from harsh to soft is called Samādhi.

Then ensues a long discussion as to whether the āroha and avaroha respectively stand for Ojas and Prasāda and if so whether Samādhi can claim a separate status of a guṇa. According to Vāmana it can.[8]

(p. 94, l. 12) Bhoja defines Samādhi thus: Samādhi is the superimposition of the properties of something on something else.[9]

(7) Saukumārya (p. 94, l. 13): Vāmana's definition of this guṇa is: Absence of harshness is tenderness (Saukumārya).[2] The contrary of tenderness is Kaṣṭatva.[3] Vāmana's ill. of harshness is:

(p. 94, l. 17)

"nidānaṁ nirdvaitaṁ priyajana sadṛktva-vyavasitiḥ /
sudhā-seka-ploṣau phalam api viruddhaṁ mama hṛdi //

Daṇḍī defines Sukumāra (tenderness) as "that which for most part has no harsh letters." He further remarks that the blemish of looseness in structure has been exhibited in a composition with all soft vocables.[4]

(p. 94, l. 19) Under the impression that it lends grandeur the Gauḍas produce compositions albeit difficult to pronounce.[5] The ill. is not traceable.

(8) Udāratā (p. 94, l. 24): Vāmana defines pregnant construction (udāratā) thus: vikaṭatvam udāratā /[6] magnificence (vikaṭatva) of construction is Pregnant construction, due to which words appear as though they were dancing (or curvetting). The ill. is (p. 94, l. 27):

(9) Artha-vyakti (p. 97, l. 27) : Vāmana defines it thus: "Explicitness (Artha-vyakti) is that which is responsible for the immediate comprehension of meaning."[8]

(p. 94, l. 28) Daṇḍī defines Artha-vyakti thus: Artha-vyakti (Explicitness of meaning) is the property by virtue of which the meaning is fully apprehended without the help of anything extraneous to complete it.[9]

The ill., of this guṇa given in Kāvyādarśa is not traceable.

(10) Kānti (p. 94, l. 29): Animated or brilliant language is Kānti. [1] The ill. not traceable.

(11) Suśabdatā [2] (p. 94, l. 30) : Bhoja defines it thus: The refined and learned use of nominal and verbal forms is suśabdatā."[3] The ill. is (p. 94, l. 30):

tasyā'jīvanir astu mātaravamā jīvasya mājīvato bhūyād vā'jananiḥ kim amba januṣā jantor vṛthā janmanaḥ / yas tvām eva na vandate na yajate nopaiti nā''lokate nopastauti na manyate na manute nādhyeti na dhyāyati [4] ||

Here the words 'ajīvaniḥ' 'ajananiḥ', etc. are refined and learned.

(12) Gāmbhīrya (p. 95, l. 1): Probably Gāmbhīrya guṇa admitted by Bhoja is discussed. Bhoja defines it thus: dhvanimattā tu gāmbhīryam / [5] Gravity or depth consists in being possessed of Suggestion (dhvani). The ill. is not traceable in Viveka. But it is possible that Bhoja's ill. of Gāmbhīrya is discussed here. In that ill. the Bhāva Rati (love) is delineated. Viveka of course following Kalpalatā, suggests that if Rati is principal it would be Dhvani and if it be subordinate it would be Guṇībhūta-vyaṅgya type of kāvya. In any case this guṇa becomes unacceptable.

(13) Ukti (p. 95, l. 2) : Bhoja defines Ukti, a śabda-guṇa according to him, thus: Significant speech is a peculiarly striking expression. [6] The ill. is (p. 95, l. 2) :

kuśalaṁ tasyā, jīvati, kuśalaṁ pṛcchāmi, jīvatīty uktam /
punar api tad eva kathayasi, mṛtāṁ nu kathayāmi yā śvasiti || [7]

(14) Prauḍhi (p. 95, l. 2) : Complete maturity or ripeness of speech is called Ripeness. [8] The ill. is:

abhyuddhṛtā vasumati dalitaṁ ripūraḥ kṣīptakramaṁ kavalitā balirāja-lakṣmīḥ / atraika-janmani kṛtaṁ yad anena yūnā janma-traye tad akarot puruṣaḥ

Ukti is the otherword for Pāka, which has several varieties like, Nālikera-pāka, mṛdvīkā-pāka, etc. The above verse, remarks Bhoja, contains Nalikera-pāka. [1]

Sub-section II: Artha-guṇas (p. 95, l. 9):

Vāmana deals with ten guṇas pertaining to Artha (sense). Their names are the same as those of sound (Śabda). [2]

(1) Ojas (P. 95, 10) : The definition Ojas as an artha-guṇa is given by Vāmana thus :

arthasya prauḍhir Ojaḥ / K. L. S. III. ii. 2.

The maturity of sense is Ojas. It is of five types.

(2) Śleṣaḥ (p 95, l. 20) : Vāmana defines Śleṣa thus: ghaṭanā Śleṣaḥ / K. L. S. III. ii. 4.

(3) Samatā (p. 95, l. 22) : The definition of Samatā is thus given by Vāmana: 'avaiṣamyaṁ Samatā /'. Uniformity or symmetry is samatā.

(4) Samādhi (p. 95, l. 25): Vāmana defines it thus artha-dṛṣṭiḥ Samādhiḥ / [3] Comprehension of or insight into the meaning is Samādhi.

Artha or import is of two types: Ayoniḥ and Anyacchāyayonīḥ : which does not proceed from any other source than the genius of the poet is Ayoni (lit. causeless i. e. to say, original) and what has the impression of someone's poem as its source is Anya-cchāyā-yoni.

The ills. are (p. 96, l. 1 and 2);—

āśvapehi mama sīdhu-bhājanād yāvadagra–daśanair na daśyase /
Candra mad-daśana-maṇḍalāṅkitaḥ khaṁ na yāsyasi hi Rohinī-bhayāt //' [4]

This is Ayoni according to Vāmana whereas the following which reflects its import is Anya-cchāya-yoni:

mā bhaiḥ Śaśāṅka mama sīdhuni nāsti Rāhuḥ sve Rohinī vasati kātara kiṁ bibheṣi / prāyo vidagdha-vanitā–nava-saṁgameṣu puṁsāṁ manaḥ pracalatīti kim atra citram // [5]

[1] Here the original seems to borrow from Bhoja's remarks on S. K. I. v. 98 :— अत्र प्रकृतिस्थकोमलकठोरेभ्यो नागरोपनागरग्राम्येभ्यो वा पदेभ्योऽभ्युद्धतादीनां ग्राम्यादीनाम् उभयेषां वा &c । (P. 71).

[5] quoted in (ibid) on III. ii. 8.

(p. 96, l. 7) Artha (import) is again divided by Vāmana [1], who is drawn upon by the original, into two types [2]: manifest (vyaktaḥ) and subtle (sūkṣma). The latter is further divided [3] into imaginable (bhavya) and conceptual or contemplable (vāsanīya). What can be easily comprehended as soon as it is brought into our consciousness is imaginable and what can be grasped after considerable contemplation is contemplable or conceptual.

(5) Gati (p 96, l. 12) is a guṇa according to Bhoja who defines it thus: "Gatiḥ sā syād avagamo yo 'rthād-arthāntarasya tu" [4]

When from a particular import another meaning is apprehended the guṇa is called Gati.

The ill. is (p. 96, l. 10):

śubhe ko'yaṁ vṛddhaḥ gṛha-parivṛḍhaḥ kiṁ tava pitā na me bhartā rātrau vyapagata-dṛg anyac ca badhiraḥ / hu huṁ huṁ śrānto'haṁ śiśayiaśur ihaivāpavarake kva yāminyāṁ yāsi svapihi nanu nirdaṁśa-maśake // [5]

(6) Mādhurya (p. 96, l. 12) : Vāmana defines it thus: ukti-vaicitryaṁ Mādhuryam / [6] Strikingness of speech is sweetness. The ill. is (p. 96, l. 15) :

rasavad amṛtaṁ kaḥ sandeho madhuny api nānyathā / &c [7]

(7) Udāratā (p. 96, l. 18): It is thus defined by Vāmana: agrāmyatvam Udāratā / It is absence of indelicacy. Words like yābha (coition) express an indelicate sense.

But when indelicacy is not felt such usages, far from being objectionable, result in Udāratā guṇa.

The ill., not traceable here, is: tvam evaṁ saundaryā sa ca ruciratāyāḥ paricitaḥ &c. [8]

(8) Saukumārya (p. 96, l. 20) : Vāmana defines it thus: apāruṣyaṁ Saukumāryam / [9], absence of harshness is Saukumārya. Bhoja gives almost the same definition thus: aniṣṭhuratvaṁ yat prāhuḥ Saukumāryaṁ tad ucyate / [10]

(9) Rīti (p. 96, l. 21) Bhoja defines this guṇa thus:

Rītiḥ sā yas tvihārthānām utpattyādi-kriyā-kramaḥ / [2]

The ill., not traceable here [3], describes the moon which gradually assumes different hues after her rise (utpatti).

(10) Kānti (p. 96, l. 27) : Probably Kānti-guṇa is illustrated here. Vāmana defines it thus: dīptarasatvaṁ Kāntiḥ / [4] When sentiments like the Erotic etc. are delineated in an exciting or splendid way the guṇa is Kānti. The ill. is probably (p. 96 l, 27): [5] nakhaṁ nakhāgreṇa vighaṭṭayantī, vivartayantī valayaṁ vilolam / āmandram āśiñjita-nūpureṇa pādena mandaṁ bhuvam ālikhantī // [6]

Here the bhāva (emotion) of bashfulness (lajjā) is delineated in a splendid manner.

(11) Sammitatva (p. 27, l. 1): This is a guṇa according to Bhoja who defines it thus:

śabdārthau yatra tulyau staḥ Sammitatvaṁ tad ucyate / [7] Equipoise is the guṇa where there is equilibrium of the sound and the sense.

The ill. is (p. 97. l. 1):

[4] V. K. L. S. III. ii. 15.

[5] The ill. of Kānti is not traceable. नखं नखाग्रेण॰ is probably the ill. of दीप्तभाव, introduced with such remarks as रसेन भावस्यापि ग्रहणम् ।

[6] The comments on नखं &c in Viveka are borrowed from लोचन (P. 90)

[7] S, K. I. 86 ab.

[8] (ibid) I. v. 117 (P. 83)

Here in the description of 'Praṇava' the sound and sense are well-balanced.

(12) Prauḍhi (p. 97, l. 2): Bhoja defines it thus: vivakṣitārtha-nirvāhaḥ kāvye prauḍhir iti smṛtā /[1] When the sense sought to be conveyed is carried through (successfully). The ill. is:—

tvad vaktrendu–vilokanākula-dhiyā dhātrā tvadīyāṁ śriyaṁ nikṣipya pratirājakeṣu viduṣāṁ lakṣmyā tvam āpūritaḥ / tenaite niyataṁ daridrati gṛheṣv eṣām iyaṁ dṛśyate naināṁ ādriyase tvam iccasi nu tāṁ tvām eva sā dhāvati //[2]

Here abundant import is conveyed thoroughly in a small compass and hence it is Prauḍhi (maturity).

(p. 97, l. 5) Now in order to pointing out the distinction between Guṇas and Alaṁkāras, Mammaṭa is quoted by the original: [3] upakurvanti taṁ santaṁ ye'ṅgadvāreṇa jātucit / hārādivat alaṁkārās te'nuprāsopamādayaḥ //[4]

The figures of sound and of sense heighten the beauty of the Rasa in a poem, but they do not do so necessarily.

Kāvyaprakāśa gives illustrations of cases when the figure of sound or of sense, as the case may be, beautifies the prevailing Rasa in the verse through words or sense. These are not traceable in Viveka.[5]

In the following verse the Anuprāsa, a figure of sound, does not heighten the beauty of the sentiment of Love-in-separation, though it beautifies the words (p. 97, l. 6):

citte huṭṭadi na tuṭṭadi sā gaṇesu sajjāsu loṭṭadi visaṭṭadi dimmuhesu / bolammi vaṭṭadi visaṭṭadi kavvabandhe jhāṇe ṇa ṭuṭṭadi ciram taruṇī taraṭṭī //[6]

In the following verse the Upamā beautifies its meaning though not the Sṛngāra (p. 97, l. 8):

2. (ibid) I. v. 122 (P. 86).
3. The whole portion (P. 97, l. 5 ff) seems to have been borrowed from K. P. by the original: यत्र तु नास्ति रसस्तत्रोक्तिवैचित्र्यमात्रपर्यवसायिनः ।...इत्यादौ वाचकमेव... इत्यादौ वाच्यमेव न तु रसम् ।...गड्डलिकाप्रवाहेणैषां भेद इत्यभिधानमसत् ।

4. K. P. VIII. 2.
5. vide (ibid) VIII. ill. 342 and 343. (P. 38f).
6. चित्ते विघटते न त्रुट्यति सा गुणेषु शय्यासु लुठति विकसति दिङ्मुखेषु । वचने वर्तते प्रवर्तते काव्यबन्धे ध्याने न त्रुट्यति चिरं तरुणी प्रगल्भा ॥ इति च्छाया.

mitre kvāpi gate saroruha-vane baddhānane tāmyati krandatsu bhramareṣu cakrāhvena viyoginā bisalatā nā"svāditā nojjhitā kaṇṭhe kevalam argaleva nihitā jīvasya nirgacchataḥ // [1]

So from the above it becomes clear that alaṁkāras do not necessarily beautify the Rasa. The distinction between alaṁkāras and guṇas is like that between ornaments of the body and the virtues which inhere the soul. To put it otherwise the relation between guṇas and Poetry is that of samavāya (inherent relation) whereas that between alaṁkāras and Poetry is that of saṁyoga (ordinary relation). [2]

It is pointed out (p. 97, l. 8) that according to some, this distinction between guṇas and alaṁkāras is nothing but blind convention, having no material basis. According to them both these, guṇas and alaṁkāras, are invariably connected. Mammaṭa remarks that it is quite incorrect to say so. [3]

Vāmana distinguishes between guṇas and alaṁkāras in a different way [4]. According to him the properties (dharmāḥ) which bring about the beauty of Poetry (kāvya-śobhā) are guṇas, while alaṁkāras merely augment this beauty. Mammaṭa, quoted in the original, does not accept Vāmana's view [5]. He argues that if guṇas bring about kāvya-śobhā, either they all do so or some of them do so, If all (samasta) do so, the Rītis, Gauḍī and Pañcāli, which do not contain all guṇas [6], would cease to be the soul of Poetry.[7] If some guṇas (katipayaiḥ) can bring about the beauty of kāvya, the following would be a kāvya, though it is not.

adrāv atra prajvalaty agnir uccaiḥ prājyaḥ prodyann ullasatyeṣa dhūmaḥ / [8]

Here the guṇa Ojas is present yet it is not a kāvya, which it should be if the mere presence of some guṇa gave rise to Poetry.

The following may with perfect justification be called Poetry on account of its alaṁkāras irrespective of the guṇas: (p. 97, l. 11)[9]

svarga-prāptir anenaiva dehena varavarṇini / asya radacchada-raso nyak-karotitarām sudhām //

9. (ibid) VIII, v. 347 (P. 390).

Here Viśeṣokti and Vyatireka are the figures of speech; by virtue of these the verse is a kāvya independently of the guṇa, Ojas, which does not here heighten the charm of the Erotic sentiment.

(p. 97, l. 12) Then are given the general directions regarding the use of the three guṇas in the different styles and Rasas.

In the style without compounds (asamāsa-mārga), depicting sentiments other than Adbhuta (Wonder), Krodha (Wrath), Bībhatsa (Loathing), Vīra (Heroic) and having figures of speech like Rasavat, Preyasvat, Ūrjasvin, Samāhita etc, the excessive development of Mādhurya and Prasāda is highly pleasurable. In the middling style (madhya-samāsa-mārga) with moderate compounds, delineating sentiments other than Karuṇa and Vipralambha Śṛṅgāra and having figures of meaning like Upamā etc, moderate use of Mādhurya and Prasāda is desirable. In the style with very long compounds (atidīrgha-samāsa-mārga) with figures of sound like Anuprāsa and of sense like Jāti and Yathāsaṁkhya, Ojas is necessarily expected in the delineation of Rasas like Bībhatsa, and Adbhuta. The chapter ends with the several illustrations of these rules.

SECTION III

In this section alaṁkāras pertaining to sound (śabda) are dealt with. Earlier writers like Bhāmaha and Daṇḍı did distinguish between the figures pertaining to sound (śabda) and those pertaining to sense (artha), though they did not treat of them in separate sections[1]. Bharata deals with one śabdālaṁkāra viz Yamaka. Bhamaha deals with Anuprāsa , Lāṭānuprāsa and Yamaka. He does not countenance the view of those who accept Prahelikās.[3] It is obvious, therefore, that he should not treat of Citra as a śabālaṁkāra. Daṇḍı deals with Anuprāsa,[4] Yamaka,[5] and Citra.[9] Vāmana treats of two Śabdālaṁkāras viz Yamaka and Anuprāsa in a separate section.[7]

1. Bhāmaha deals with Anuprāsa, Yamaka and Laṭānuprāsa in Ch. II of his Kāvyālaṁkāra, along with alaṁkāras of sense like Rūpaka, Dīpaka, Upamā &c. Daṇḍī treats of Anuprāsa along with guṇas in the Ist chapter of his Kāvyādarśa, he mentions Yamaka too (vide ch. I. 61) but for convimence' sake treats of it along with Citra in the Third Section of his work, where in doṣas of Kāvya also are dealt with. But both of them distinguish between Arthālaṁkāras and Śabdālaṁkāras (Vide B. K. L. I. 15 ed.).
2. He also mentions and illustrates Grāmyānuprāsa (B. K. L. II. 6.) vide also (ibid) II 4, 5, 8 and 9.

3. (ibid) II. 19 and 20.
4. Anuprāsa i.e. Śrutyanuprasa (K. D. I. 52) and Vṛttyanuprāsa (K. D. I. 55).
5. (ibid) I. 61.
6. It appears that Daṇḍī does not include Citra in Śabdālaṁkāra for he mention citra-mārga distinctly from alaṁkāras of Śabda and Artha (vide K. D. III. 186). The compound सुकःदुष्कराः there, applies to चित्रमार्ग[5] alone (vide K. D. III. 78 and 83).
7. vide V. K. L. S. IV. i. (Here पादानुप्रास is also given which is लाटानुप्रास of others).

Rudraṭa gives five figures of Śabda. He includes Citra[1] in his list of Śabdālaṁkāras, the other being, Vakrokti, Anuprāsa, Yamaka and Śleṣa. (pertaining to Śabda).[2] Udbhaṭa mentions four Śabdālaṁkaras[3] viz Punaruktavadābhāsa, Chekānuprāsa, Vṛttyanuprāsa and Lāṭānuprāsa. He does not mention Yamaka, and Citra. Bhoja treats of twenty-four Śabdālaṁkāras in his Sarsvatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa.[4] Hemacandra refuses[5] to accept the long list given by Bhoja, and gives seven figures of sound, viz. Anuprāsa, Lāṭānuprāsa, Yamaka, Citra, Śleṣa, Vakrokti, and Punaruktābhāsa.[6] These are the same as those given by Mammaṭa.[7]

Kalpalatā deals with several Śabdālaṁkāras. Possibly it gave the several figures given by Bhoja in his Sarasvatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa.

(p. 101, l. 1) In the beginning of this chapter two verses[8] from

---

1. Rudraṭa is perhaps the first writer, who includes Citra in his list of Śabdālaṁkāras, though not the first to treat of it. Bhāmaha mentions but rejects it. Daṇḍī treats of it at some length but does not bracket it with figures of sound (vide K. D. III. 186). Namisādhu's remarks are to the same effect : ' अन्यैरनुक्तं चित्रं शब्दालंकारमध्ये समुच्चीयते। (नमि० on R. K. L. II. 13.) Rudraṭa differentiates between शब्दालंकारs and अर्थालंकारs.
2. R. K. L. II. 13.
3. Udbhaṭa is the first to mention Punaruktavad-ābhāsa. None of the earlier writers refers to it. He does not actually distinguish between शब्दालंकारs and अर्थालंकारs, yet deals with the former before, and the latter afterwards. Indurāja points out this distinction in his Vṛtti. [vide U.K.L,S.L,V. (P. 1)].
4. S. K. II. 3&4. For a detailed discussion vide Bhoja's Sr. Pra. Vol. I.
5. vide H. K. S, V. (P. 405, ll. 22–26).
6. This is the same as the Punaruktavadābhāsa of Udbhaṭa and Mammaṭa.
7. Mammaṭa treats of two types of Vakrokti, श्लेषमूला and काकुमूला, while हेमचन्द्र accepts the first type alone and rejects the second.
8. Two verses are quoted as is clear from the remarks:
"इह-शिष्टेत्यादिश्लोकद्वयेन &c," (विवेक–P. 101, l. 4). The verses are = इह शिष्टानुशिष्टानां शिष्टानामपि सर्वथा ।
वाचामेव प्रसादेन लोकयात्रा प्रवर्तते ॥
इन्दमन्धंतमः कृत्स्नं जायते भुवनत्रयम् ।
यदि शब्दाह्वयं ज्योतिरासंसारान्न दीप्यते ॥ K. D. I. 3&4. These are also quoted by Bhoja in the Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa (loc. cit, P. 389—Josyer's Ed.).
जाति, गुम्फना, शय्या, युक्ति etc are the figures of words accepted, defined, dissussed, clarified and illustrated by Bhoja in his S. K. (vide S. K. II. 3, 6, etc etc.) Is is possible that some of these twentyfour Śabdālaṁkāras of Bhoja were not accepted by Kalpalatā, just as they were not by Mammaṭa and Hemacandra. It seems that Kalpalatā does not here follow any one particular earlier writer. It did accept the detailed treatment of Citra from Bhoja, yet it quotes and borrows from Hemacandra, Mammaṭa and Bhāmaha. Even from Viveka it seems clear that Kalpalatā did not treat the Śabdālaṁkaras, Jāti, Gumphanā, Śayya etc in detail. We, therefore, do not deal with them here, as we follow the sub-commentary Viveka, and do not propose to dilate on topics which are not apparently detailed here. We, however, refer the reader to Dr. Raghavan's "Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa Vol. I. Part II — P. 363 ff., for a detailed and critical treatment of these Sabdālaṁkāras.

Daṇḍi's Kāvyādarśa are quoted, to show how the Śabdālaṁkāra Jāti is useful. Then the three other Śabdālaṁkāras viz Gumphanā, Śayyā and Yukti are mentioned.

(1) Kāku-Vakrokti (p. 101, l. 6) is defined and discussed. The Śabdālaṁkāra Vakrokti is of two types Kāku-vakrokti and Śleṣa-vakrokti. Rudraṭa gives these two types[1] but does not subdivide the second into sabhaṅga and abhaṅga. He merely illustrates the former. Hemacandra gives both the sub-varieties of this type of Vakrokti, following Mammaṭa, and borrows the ill. of the sabhaṅga-śleṣa-vakrokti from Rudraṭa,[2] but he does not accept Kāku vakrokti as a Śabdālaṁkāra, which has been accepted both by Rudraṭa and Mammaṭa. Probably Kalpalatā follows Hemacandra in not conceding to Kāku-vakroti the status of a Śabdālaṁkāra. Hemacandra's explanation of Kāku-vakroti is borrowed in the original or Pallava.[3] The long discussion regarding Kāku borrowed by Hemacandra from Nāṭyaśāstra is also borrowed whole-sale in Viveka.[4] It is probable that Kalpalatā too rejected Kāku-vakrokti on the ground that it is a Pāṭhya-dharma.[5]

(p. 103, l. 1. to l. 28)[6] and (p. 104, l. 1. to l. 28)[7] are borrowed wholesale partly from N. S. and mainly from Hemacandra's K. S. The original also appears to have borrowed from the latter.[8]

1. R. K. L. II. 14.
2. (ibid) II. 15., which has been borrowed by Bhoja to illustrate his Vakrokti (Nir- vyūḍha type), which is a variety of Vākovākya according to him (vide S. K. II 131, 132 ff.).
3 "तत्र हि साकांक्षनिराकांक्षादिक्रमेण पठयमानोऽसौ शब्दः &c । [H. K. V. (P. 333, l. 12)]
4. Viveka P. 101, l. 4. 'सप्तस्वरास्त्रीणि स्थानानि ।' &c. to l. 25, the whole passage is borrowed from H. K. S. V.—P. 333 l. 8 to (ibid) P. 334, l. 18. Viveka (P. 101, ll. 26–27) are H. K. S. V. (P. 334 ll. 23–24).
5. Hemacandra quotes Rājaśekhara while rejecting Kāku–vakrokti. He says, "काकुवक्रोक्ति-र्नामशब्दालंकारोऽयमिति रुद्रटः" स्त्वलंकारत्वेन न वाच्या। पाठधर्मत्वात्। तथा च 'अभिप्रायवान् पाठधर्मः काकुः स कथमलंकारीस्यादि'ति यायावरीयः ।" (P.334)

The verses on Pp. 101 and 102 are quoted from Nāṭya Śāstra (XVII. 99 to 104).

6. P. 103, ll. 1 to 15 borrowed from H. K. S. V. (P. 335, ll. 2–4 & 5–20), P. 103. ll. 16 to 28 borrowed from N. S. XVII. 107 ff. The order of these verses and the readings occasionally differ from those found in the Nirnaya Sāgar Ed. of N. S.
7. P. 104, l. 1 to l 16. borrowed from N. S. XVII. 111 to 118. The order, punctuation and readings here in the text of Viveka differ from those of the Nirnayasāgar Ed. of N. S. P. 104, l. 17 to l 24 borrowed from H. K. S. V. (P. 335, l. 23 to P. 336, l. 17), P. 104, l. 25 to l 28 borrowed from H. K. S. V. (P. 336, l. 27 to l. 337, ll. 12–18).
8. The whole passage, viz H. K. S. A. C.–P. 336, l.1 to 9., is quoted in the original : सा च काकुर्द्विविधा। साकांक्षा निराकांक्षा च ।...यस्माद्वाक्याद्यादृशः...तद्वाक्यम् साकाङ्क्षम्। तद्विपरीतं निराकाङ्क्षम् ।...विषयोऽपि त्रिविधो...यथा 'देशः सोऽयम्' । अत्र साकाङ्क्ष-काकुप्रभावात् 'ततोऽभ्यधिकं कुरुते' इत्यर्थान्तरे गतिः ॥ Probably the whole passage from H. K. S. A. C. (P. 337, ll. 1 to 11) was also quoted.

(p. 104, l. 25) Kaku is of two types, with expectancy (sākāṅkṣa) and without expectancy (nirākāṅkṣa), according as the sentence is with or without expectancy (ākāṅkṣa). When something more or less than the conventional sense can be ascertained from a sentence by virtue of context, that sentence is sākāṅkṣa. The reverse of this is nirākāṅkṣa. The expectancy belongs to the speaker but is metaphorically transferred to the 'vākya'.

The Sākāṅkṣa Kāku may give rise to another sense (arthāntara) or some peculiarity of the expressed sense (artha-gata eva viśeṣaḥ), or the contrary of that sense (tad-artha'bhāvo vā).

In the ill. (p. 105, l. 1):

deśaḥ so 'yam arāti-śoṇita-jalaiḥ yasmin hradāḥ pūritāḥ &c."[1] by virtue of sākāṅṣa Kāku another sense, viz. "does even more than what Paraśurāma did", is obtained.

In the other ill. (which is merely referred to) sākaṅkṣa-Kāku gives rise to a particular intensity in the expressed sense. It is:

na yasya Daśakandharaṁ kṛtavato 'pi kakṣāntare, gataḥ sphuṭam avandhyatām adhipayodhi sāndhyo vidhiḥ / tadātmaja ihāṅgadaḥ prahita eṣa Saumitriṇā kva sa kva sa Daśānano nanu nivedyatāṁ rāksasāḥ. //[2]

Here the words "tadātmaja iha Aṅgadaḥ" have Kāku with expectancy suggests the extraordinary merits of Aṅgada, the son Vāli.

The third ill. of sākāṅkṣa Kāku is: (p. 105, l. 3).

nirvāṇa-vaira-dahanāḥ praśamād arīṇām nandantu Pāṇḍu-tanayāḥ saha Mādhavena /
rakta-prasādhita-bhuvaḥ kṣata-vigrahāś ca svasthā bhavantu Kuru-rāja-sutāḥ sabhṛtyāḥ //[3]

Here by virtue of the Kāku the contrary meaning is implied.[4]

(p, 105, l. 1) The ill. of, Sleṣa-vakrokti, (abhaṅga) is:

aho kenedṛśī budhir dāruṇā tava nirmitā / triguṇā śrūyate buddher na tu dārumayī kvacit //[5]

1. The words (P. 105, l. 1) काकुप्रभावात् are borrowed from Hemacandra (vide K. S, A, C.—P 326, l. 9) The remarks of Viveka are borrowed from Hemacandra's Viveka (P. 326, l. 27 ff). The ill. under discussion is देशः सोऽयमराति&c from Veni. III. 33.
2. This is also found in Hemacandra who refers to this as well as the following verse viz 'निर्वाणवैरदहनाः &c' in the remarks on 'देशः सोऽयम् &c', borrowed by Viveka. Naturally the original borrowed the other two ills. also from Hemacandra.
3. Veni. I. 7.
4. The remarks on this verse (P. 105, l. 3) viz वचनोच्चारणम्&c are borrowed, as noted above, from H. K. S. A. C. by the original. The explanation of the compound 'वचनोच्चारणम्' in Viveka is borrowed verbatim from H. K, S. V. (P. 337, l. 26).
5. This is ill. of अभंगश्लेषेण वक्रोक्ति in K. P. (P. 406).

Here the word 'dāruṇā' yields two meanings without being required to be split up.[1]

(p. 105, l. 1) The ill. of sabhaṅga-śleṣa-vakrokti is the same as that given by Rudraṭa[2] and borrowed by Hemacandra:

kiṁ Gauri māṁ prati ruṣā nanu gaur ahaṁ kiṁ kupyāmi kāṁ prati mayīty anumānato 'ham jānāmy atas tvam anumānata eva satyam itthaṁ giro Giribhuvaḥ kuṭilā jayanti ||

Here the words "gaur imām" etc. have to be split up in order to get the other sense, hence it is sabhaṅga.[3]

(2) Lāṭānuprāsa (p. 105, l. 7) is a type of Anuprāsa, which is recognised by Bhāmaha, Mammaṭa, Hemacandra, etc. The definition of this Śabdālaṁkāra is not traceable here. Perhaps Hemacandra's definition is quoted in the original.[4] The ill. of this Anūprāsa when several words (padas) are repeated in the same sense but are construed differently is: (p. 105, l. 7)

yasya na savidhe dayitā dava-dahanas tuhina-dīdhitis tasya |
yasya ca savidhe dayitā dava-dahanas tuhina-dīdhitis tasya ||

Here in the first half 'dava-dahanatva' is the predicate and 'tuhina-didhititva' is the subject, in the second half they are transposed.[5]

The other ill. of Lāṭānuprāsa is borrowed from Bhāmaha: (p. 105, l. 9)

dṛṣṭiṁ dṛṣṭi-sukhāṁ dhehi candraś candra-mukhoditaḥ ||[6]

Here the words 'dṛṣṭi' and 'candra' are repeated in the same sense but in different contexts. The word 'dṛṣṭi' is first used as the object of the verb 'dhehi' (cast), it is used again in connection with pleasure (sukha)[7]; similarly the word' 'candra' is first used as the subject of the verb 'uditaḥ' (has risen), and once again it is used as the upamāna (standard of comparison) for the face.

---

[1] It is not difficult to understand how the ills. of Sākaṅkṣa Kāku are discussed after this ill. of abhaṅga-śleṣa-vakrokti. Here Viveka comments on Pallava. Hence the apparent lack of order in the treatment.

[2] R. K. L. II. 15.

[3] In Viveka (P. 105, l. 3) the word अनुमानात् is borrowed from H. K. S. V. P. 332, 1.22: अत इति। अस्मादनुमानात्&c. The explanation of this word in Viveka (P. 105, l. 4) is borrowed from नमिसाधु on R. K. L. II. 15.

[4] "When a noun or any other word or words are repeated once or more than once, in the same sense but in a different context, the Anuprāsa is Lāṭānuprāsa." H.K.S. (P.296).

[5] The ill. under discussion here (P. 105, l. 8) is borrowed by Hemacandra (H.K.S A.C.— P. 297 v. 441), from K. P. (P. 411). The remarks given in Viveka are borrowed from H. K. S. V. (P. 297, l 18–19). This ill. is introduced with the words 'अनेकस्य सकृद्यथा' in H. K. S. A. C. (P. 297). Here (P. 105, l. 7) the original borrows from Hemacandra.

[6] B. K. L. II. 8 c.d. Bhāmaha does not define लाटानुप्रास.

[7] The reading 'सुखसम्बन्धितया' is unquestionably correct.

(p. 105, l. 12) Then follows a long long section which purports to vindicate Dhvani (suggestion). It is transplanted from Dhvanyāloka. This long portion occupies a little more than one-fourth of the whole text of Viveka, hich has drawn upon both Dhvanyāloka and Locana, without adding anything original.

(3) Punarukta (p. 186, l. 23) is a doṣa according to some writers. Viveka points out that this is out of question. For nobody would utter the same words again [2]. If their sense is the same but purport is different we get Lāṭānuprāsa. If the sense too is different we get Yamaka. They are all Punaruktābhāsa (semblence of repetition) [3]. Punaruktābhāsa is of three types viz. (i) When the same words are used in the same senses, (ii) When the same words are used in different senses and (iii) When different words are used but their senses appear to be the same. In the first case, it is Lāṭānuprāsa; in the second, it is Yamaka; and in the third, it is Punaruktābhāsa, a Sabdālaṁkāra, rightly so called. So it is proper to say that Lāṭānuprāsa comes under Punaruktābhāsa and Yamaka is an exception thereto.

(4) Nāma-dvirukti [4] (p. 187, l. 6) type of Anuprāsa has several varieties. The repetition may be naturally inherent (svabhāvataḥ), or in a metaphorical sense (gauṇyā), or to convey pervasion (vīpsā) or frequency (ābhikṣṇya).

1. Almost every word here is borrowed at times from Dhvanāloka and at times from Locana, with the exception that at times the Viveka-kāra might have resorted, according to his wont, to occasional paraphrasing.

   It is difficult to divine the exact motive behind inserting this long discussion on Dhvani at this juncture. But probably it is calculated to differentiate Dhvani (or Uttama-kāvya) from the other varieties of Poetry or rather to differentiate the citra type of Poetry which is bereft of Dhvani, from the other two types viz Uttama and Madhyama (Guṇī-bhūta-vyaṅgya) in which Dhvani is respectively predominant and subordinated.

   The author of Viveka mentions Ānanda Vardhana by name as the author of this Kārikā quoted by him and thus acknowledges his debt to him. But he does not mention the name of Abhinavagupta, though he borrows whole-sale from him. Nearly the whole of Dhvanāloka with Locana upto P. 486 (Kashi SK series) is quoted here. It should be noted, however, that this vindication of Dhvani, is not a gratuitous digression.
2. For the discusion of this doṣa vide Viveka (P. 26, l. 19) also B. K. L. (IV. 12, 13 etc.).
3. It is called Punaruktavadābhāsa by Udbhaṭa (V. K. L. S. I. i.) but while giving its definition he calls it Punaruktābhāsa. [(ibid) I 3. ab]. Indurāja tries in a learned way to account for this discrepaney in his Laghuvṛtti on V. K. L. S. I 3 ab. Hemacandra calls it Punaruktābhāsa (H. K. S.—V. 8.) and Mammaṭa calls it Punaruktavadābhāsa (K. P. IX. 9.—P. 344)
4. स्वभावतश्च गौण्या च वीप्साभिक्ष्ण्यादिभिश्च सा । नाम्नां द्विरुक्तिभिर्वाक्ये तदनुप्रास उच्यते ॥ S. K. II. 99.

The ill. of natural repetition (svabhāvataḥ) is: ghanā-ghanāḥ /[1]. Here the word 'ghanā', if not repeated, fails to convey the desired sense. (p. 187, l. 11) Some urge that Vṛtti or Vṛttiyanuprāsa is of twelve types viz. (1) Gambhīrā (2) Ojasvinī (3) Prauḍhā (4) Madhurā (5) Niṣṭhurā (6) Ślathā (7) Kaṭhorā (8) Komalā (9) Miśrā (10) Paruṣā (11) Lalitā and (12) Amitā.[2]

The ill. of Ojasvinī is: (p. 187, l. 14).

"pattā asībharāhaahadhāu &c,[3] '

The ills. of other types are not traceable.[4]

Varṇānuprāsa is divided by Bhoja into 12 types. Of these Punaruktimān is one.

The ill. of this variety is: (p. 187, l: 15)

"dhumāe dhumakaluse &c."[5]

(p. 187, l. 16) Bhoja divides Lāṭānuprāsa into two types. Vyavahita and Avyavahita.[6] Of these Avyavahita is divided into six sub-varieties, of which Vyasta is one.

The ill. of Vyasta is (p. 187, l. 16):—

samupphundanto etc.[7] The ills. the other varieties are not traceable.

(p. 187, l. 17) The ill. of Vyavahita type of Anuprāsa with several (anekaguṇā) repetitions is:

---

1. The whole verse is : कुर्वन्तोऽमी कलकलं मारुतेन चलाचलाः । प्रातर्गुलुगुलायन्ते गजा इव घनाघनाः ॥ S. K. II. v. 228 (P. 254).
2. vide S. K. II. 84, 85. Bhoja gives these varieties according to scme (kaiścit), but he does not consider them to be distinct from guṇas (excellences).
3. पत्ता भसीभराहअधाउशिलाअलणिसण्णराइअजलअम् ।
   सङ्जं ओज्जुरपहसिददरिमुहणिम्महिअवउलमइरामोदम् ॥ S. K. II. v. 191 (P. 240)
   Here the repetition of linguals gives rise to Ojasvinī type of Anuprāsa (having floridity).
4. vide S. K. II vv. 190, 192, 193 to 201.
5. धूमाइ धूमकलुसे जलइ जलन्ता वुहत्थजीआबन्धे । पडिरअपडिउण्णदिसे रसइ रसन्तिसिहरे घणुम्मि णहअलम् ॥ S. K. II. v. 227 (P. 253).
   Here the words धूम, ज्वलत् etc are repeated hence the Anuprāsa is called Punaruktimān (having repetition).
6. S. K. II. 103.
7. उअहिस्स जसेण जसं धीरं धीरेण गरुइआइ वि गरुअम् । रामो ठिएअ वि ठिइं भणइ रवेण अ रवं समुप्फुन्दन्तो ॥ S. K. II. v. 240.
   Here the अ (i. e. च) coming between the repetitions of the word रव is not to be considered as a vyavadhāyaka.

'kiñcid vacmi na vacmi vacmi yadi vā &c.'[1]

Here the words 'vacmi' and 'santi' are repeated several times.

(p. 187, l. 23) Anuprāsa becomes vitiated (duṣṭa) when it is uncalled for and serves no purpose, or when certain things not known (aprasiddha) in Purāṇas etc., are described for the sake of the Anuprāsa. In the first case the blemish is called Vaiphalya; in the latter, it is Aprasiddha[2]. The ill. of Aprasiddha is: (p. 188, l. 4)

> 'Cakrī cakrārapaṅktiṁ Harir api ca harīn Dhūrjatir-dhūr-dhvājāntān > akṣaṁ nakṣaḥtra-nātho 'ruṇam api Varuṇaḥ kūbarāgraṁ Kuberaḥ / &c."[3]

Here eulogy of the chariot of the Sun is based on descriptions not known in Purāṇas or Itihāsas hence the Anuprāsa is aprasiddha.

(5) Yamaka (p. 188, l, 6): The definition of Yamaka[4] is not traceable. After giving the definition of Yamaka[5], Hemacandra gives its several varieties; the whole portion on Yamaka seems to have been imported from Hemacandra's Kāvyanuśāsana Alaṁkāracudāmaṇi by the original.[6]

---

[1] The rest of the verse is : किं वच्मि वच्मीदृशम्
दृश्यन्ते न भवादृशेषु पतिषु स्वेषामदोषे दमाः ।
ते किं सन्ति न सन्ति सन्ति यदि वा के सन्ति सन्तीदृशाः
सर्वस्तेषु गुणैर्गृहीतहृदयो लोकः कुतो वर्तते ॥ S. K. II. v. 248 (P. 261). It is also quoted by Hemacandra as an ill. of लाटानुप्रास, having frequent (असकृत्) repetitions of several words (vide A. K. S. A. C.—P. 297).

[2] The third doṣa of Anuprāsa viz Vṛtti-virodha, is given by Mammaṭa but not traceable here probably because it is not accepted by Kalpalatā as it is rejected by Hemacandra, who considers it to be the reverse of a guṇa. (vide) H. K. S—P. 290 and H. K. S. V.—P. 290, l. 20).

[3] This verse is quoted by K. P. (P. 589) and Hemacandra as an ill. of अपुष्टार्थ in अनुप्रास under अपुष्टार्थ दोष (H. K. S.-P. 268)

[4] vide K. D. I. 61 ab.

[5] 'सत्यर्थेऽन्यार्थानां वर्णानां श्रुतिक्रमैक्ये यमकम् ।' H. K. S. V. 3.

[6] It would be difficult to say whether the original borrows from Kāvya-prakāśa or Hemacandra's K. S. A. C. for Hemacandra borrows from K. P. (cf K. P. P. 413-14)—द्विधा विभक्ते पादे प्रथमादिपादादि भागः पूर्ववद्द्वितीयादिपादादिभागेष्वन्तभागोऽन्तभागेष्विति विंशतिभेदाः । &c. K. P. P. 413-14 and तथा भागजस्य द्विधा विभक्ते पादे प्रथमपादादिभागः पूर्ववन्द्दितीयादिपादादिभागेषु अन्तभागोऽन्तभागेषु-इत्यष्टाविशतिभेदाः । &c H. K. S. A. C.—P, 302, ll. 6-7.), yet it is certain that here the original draws upon Hemacandra's work. For Mammaṭa accepts 11 sub varieties of Pādāvṛtti and twenty sub-varieties of अर्धभागावृत्ति, whereas Hemacandra gives 15 Varieties af Pādāvṛtti and 28 sub-varieties of Ardhabhāgāvṛtti. Viveka also accepts 15 sub-varieties of Pādāvṛtti (vide Viveka-P. 189, l. 16). Mammaṭa does not give four sub-varieties viz (1) when the first पाद is repeated in the second and the third in the fourth, (2) when the first is repeated in the fourth पाद and the second in the third, (3) when half the verse is repeated in the other half and lastly, (4) when the whole verse is repeated in another verse.

Yamaka is broadly divided into two varieties viz Pādāvṛtti and Tadbhāgāvṛtti.[4] In the first, one of the metrical feet is repeated, and we get in all the fifteen sub-varieties of Pādāvṛtti. In the second variety, the half, or a third, or a fourth part of a metrical foot is repeated, When a half of a metrical foot is repeated, we get in all, twenty-eight sub-varieties, when a third of a foot is repeated, we get forty-two sub-varieties and when a fourth part of a metrical foot is repeated we get fifty-six sub-varieties and so on.

(p. 188, l. 9 & l. 8) But when the halves of different Pādas are reciprocally exchanged we get several varieties.[1]

(p. 188, l. 9) According to Bhāmaha there are five varieties of Yamaka viz Ādi, Madhya, Anta, Pādābhyāsa, and Āvali. He remarks that Sandaṣṭaka, Samudgaka etc. are included in these five varieties.[2]

The ill. of Madhyānta Yamāka is:

sādhuḥ saṁsārād bibhyaty asmād asārāt
kṛtvā kleśāntaṁ yāti vartma praśāntam | jātiṁ vyādhīnāṁ durdamānam adhīnāṁ vañchan jyāyastvam chindhi muktānayastvam ||[3]

(p. 189, l. 6) Chakraka type of Yamaka is illustrated in:

sabhājanaṁ samānīya sa māni yaḥ sphuṭannapi |—
si phuṭaṁ na pihitaṁ: carke hītam cakre sabhājanam[4] ||

(p. 189, l. 9) The following ill. of sthūlavyapeta type of Yamaka is:

jayanti te sadā dehaṁ namasyanti jayanti te |
bhavānyato namasyanti sadādehaṁ bhavānyataḥ ||[5]

should not be suspected to be a commixture (saṁkara) of Antādīka Yamaka, in the same way as sabhājanam is not a commixtnre (saṁkara) of Ādyanta Yamaka.[6]

[6] The Śāstrakāra referred to here (Viveka P. 189, l. 8) is रुद्रट who gives this illustration viz सभाजनम् समानीय etc (R. K. L. III. 31).

(p. 189, l, 10) The ill. of Mukha type of Yamaka is:

cakran dahātāraṁ cakranda hatāram khaḍgena tavājau rājann ari-nārī // [1]

(p. 189, l. 15) The varieties of Yamaka given by Bhoja are discussed. He does not accept the madhya type of Ekapāda-vyapeta Yamaka. [2]

The ill. of Yamaka, where words are repeated for more times than is necessary to bring about the Yamaka, is (p. 189, l. 23):

avasitaṁ hasitaṁ prasitaṁ mudā vilasitaṁ hrasitaṁ smarabhāsitam / [3] &c.

Here 'sitam' repeated only once is sufficient to bring about the Yamaka, yet it is repeated for four more times.

The ills. of formal similarity (ekarūpatā) of repetitions are not traceable. [4]

The ill. of more than necessary repetitions having formal similarity is:

sabhāsu rājannasurāhatair mukhair mahīsurāṇāṁ vasurājitaiḥ stutāḥ / na bhāsurā yānti surānna te guṇāḥ prajāsu rāgātmasu rāśitāṁ gatāḥ // [5]

(p. 190 l. 4) The varieties of Asthāna Yamaka are discussed. When there is no regulation as regards the particular place of the words repeated, the Yamaka is called Asthāna-Yamaka. [6] It is of two types Avyapeta and Vyapeta. They are divided into several varieties viz, Pāda-gata, Śloka-gata, Pada-sandhigata etc. These being further divided into Sūkṣma and Sthūla [7], according as the number of syllables repeated is small or great. [8]

The ill of Avyapeta in Pāda-sandhi, with repetition of many syllables is (p. 190, l. 6); upoḍha-ragāpy abalā madena sā madena sā manyu-rasena yojitā / na yojitātmānam anaṅgātāpitāṁ gatāpi tāpāya mamāsa neyate // [9]

The ill, of Yamaka of Avyapeta type in Pāda-sandhi with small number of repeated syllables is: (p. 190, l. 6)

matāṁ dhunānāramatāma-kāmatā-matāpalabdhāgrimatānulomatā / matāvayatyuttamatāvilomatāmatāmyatas te samatā na vāmatā // [10]

10. (ibid) II. v. 129. This is K. D. III. 49, ill. पादचतुष्टयगतव्यपेतमादिमध्यान्तयमकम्

The ill. of Avyapeta in Avyayeta type with several syllable repeated is (p. 190, l. 6):—

eatamāḥ satamālo yaḥ pārāpārāyataḥ sa dāvo'dāvaḥ / lokālokānukṛtih sahyaḥ sahyam anabhra kūṭaih kūṭaiḥ // [1]

The ill. of the same type with smaller number of syllables repeated is (p. 190, l. 7):

sanākavanitaṁ nitambaruciraṁ ciram suninadair nadair vṛtam amum / mahāphaṇavato 'vato rasaparā parāstavasudhā sudhādhivasati // [2]

The ill. of Vyapeta in Pādasandhi with repetition of several syllables is: (p. 190, l. 7)

haṭha-pīta-mahārāṣṭrī-daśanacchada-pāṭalā / pāṭalākalikānekair ekaikā lilihe'libhih // [3]

The ill. of sūkṣma in that variety is (p. 190, l. 7):

dharādharākāra-dharā dharābhujaṁ bhujā mahīm pātumahina-vikramāḥ / kramāt sahante sahasā hatārayo rayoddhurā yāna-dhurā-valambinaḥ // [4]

In the last pāda here the repetition of 'dhurā' involves a small number of syllables and is intervened by the word 'vāna' it is Sūkṣma-vyapeta. The other three pādas have avyapeta type of Asthāna Yamaka in a chain.

The ill. of sthūla in Vyapeta and sūkṣma in Avyapeta is:—(p. 190, l. 13)

sālaṁ vahantī suratāpanīyaṁ sālaṁ taḍidbhāsuratāpanīyam / rakṣobha-rakṣobha-rasatrikūṭā laṁkākalaṁkākalikādrikūṭā // [5]

Here in the first two quarters (pādas) 'sālaṁ sālam' is Vyapeta and 'suratāpanīaṁ suratāpanīyam is sthula of the same variety (svabhede i. e. vyapete). In the last two quarters kūṭa kūṭa illustrated sūkṣma type of Yamaka of a different type (anyabheda i. e. vyapeta) from that in 'rakṣobha rakṣobha (which is Avypeta Yamaka),

In the following ill. also there is sūkṣma type of Vyapeta Yamaka nanāma loko vidamānarena mahī na cāritram udāradhīram / nanāma loko etc. // [6]. Where repetition of 'nanā nanā' is the ill. of Sūksma vyapeta, the rest of the verse being ill. of Sthūla vyapeta type.

(6) Sleṣa (p. 190, l. 19)[1] : Sleṣa is also an arthālaṁkāra.

The definition of Śleṣa, a Śabdālaṁkāra, is not traceable in Viveka[2]. It seems that here, as elsewhere, the original draws upon K. P. and H. K. S. The illustrations of the nine types of Śleṣa according to Mammaṭa are not traceable but in all probability they were borrowed by the original.

Uddbaṭa treats Śleṣa as an arthālaṁkāra.[3]
His ill. of Śleṣa is (p. 190, l. 22):
svayañ ca pallavātāmra bhāsvat-kara-virājinī / prabhāta-sandyevāsvāpa-phala-lubdhehita-pradā //[4]

This is Artha-sleṣa according to Udbhaṭa. Indurāja his scholiast points out[5] that in the first half of this ill., as the words are pronounced with a single vocal effort (eka-prayatnoccārya),[6] there is Artha-śleṣa. In short, as the words (yielding two different meanings) are exactly homonymic in nature the alaṁkāra is Artha-śleṣa. In the second half, the words do yield two meanings but only after some change in their svara etc., hence it is an ill. of Śabda-Śleṣa according to Indurāja.[7]

Mammaṭa does not accept this.[8] According to him 'svayañ ca etc', the whole verse, is an ill. of Śabda-śleṣa, with the difference that the first half contains abhaṅga-śabda-śleṣa while the latter half contains sabhaṅga-śabda-śleṣa. He points out the criterion of judging whether a doṣa, a guṇa or an alaṁkāra appertains to sound (śabda) or to sense (artha). If the doṣa, guṇa or alaṁkāra is present (anvaya) or absent (vyatireka) according as the particular words responsible therefor are present or absent, then it appertains to Śabda and if it is present even when the synonyms of such words are used in their places, it is said to appertain to Artha. Judging by this criterion, as Viveka points out, 'svayañ ca etc. is Śabda-śleṣa, for the śleṣa immediately disappears if 'bhāsvat-kara' were substituted by its synonym 'dīpra-pāṇi'[9]. Mammaṭa points out another ill. of Artha-Śleṣa; it is (p. 190, l. 21):

1. तद्भाव इति । Viveka (P. 190, l. 19) should be in a separate paragraph, The words तद्भाव etc are borrowed from K. P. P. 424 : " कष्टत्वादिगाढत्वाद्यनु...तद्भाव-तदभावानुविधायित्वादेव शब्दार्थगतत्वेन व्यवस्थाप्यन्ते । "
2. vide K. P. IX. 7.

4. ibid (P. 55),
5. ibid (P, 56).
6. 'एकप्रयत्नोच्चार्य॰ ' is the word used by उद्भट in his definition of श्लेष. Indurāja explains it as : तन्त्रेणोच्चरणं. Now 'तन्त्र' is explained by कामधेनु thus: अनेकोपकारकारि सकृदुच्चारणं तन्त्रम् । Gopendra Tippa on V. K. L. S. IV. iii. 7. (P. 65). Ratneśvara on S. K. II. 68. explains it thus : 'अनेकसम्बन्धानामेकरूप्येण वर्तनं तन्त्रम् । '
7. vide Laghuvṛtti on V. K. L. S. (P. 56).
8. K. P.—P. 423 & 424.
9. The reading दीप्रप्राणि (Viveka-P.190, 1.22) is obviously a misprint it should be दीप्रपाणि॰ stokenonnatim āyāti stokenā''yāty adhogatim / aho susadṛśī vṛttis tulākoṭeḥ kholasya ca //[1]

Here the Śleṣa does not disappear even if the words 'svalpena' and 'ucchaistvam' etc. were substituted for 'stokena' and 'unnatim' etc. respectively.

In 'svayañ ca' &c Pārvati is compared to morning twilight (prabhāta-sandhyā), hence there is Upāmā here.

The other contention of Indurāja is that in this verse the prominent figure of speech is Śleṣa and not Upamā, for the former is the basis of the latter.[2] He further suggests that whenever any other figure comes together with Śleṣa, the prominent figure is always Sleṣa. If we do not accept this, Śleṣa would cease to have any scope (anavakāśa).[3] Hence according to him Śleṣa is the figure of speech in such cases and it gives rise to the faint image of the other alaṁkāras which do not rise to prominence.[4]

Mammaṭa, who is drawn upon by the original, does not accept this[5]. He points out that the province of Upamā is not merely restricted to similarity of guṇa (quality) or kriyā (action) as in (p. 191, l. 4):

"kamalam iva mukhaṁ manojñam etat kacatitarām /."

It also extends beyond that to mere verbal similarity (śabda-mātra-sāmya) between the Upamāna and Upameya as in (p. 191, l. 4):

'sakala-kalaṁ puram etaj jātaṁ samprati sudhāṁśubimbam iva /'.

So according to Mammaṭa there is Upamā in 'svayañ ca' etc. giving rise to the image of Śleṣa and not vice versa, as Indurāja claims. Mammaṭa quotes Rudraṭa in this connection.

(p. 191, l. 7) Again[7] it is not true to say that Upama is possible only where the common property (sādhāraṇa dharma) is not mentioned.

4. अलंकारन्तराणामत्र प्रतिभामात्रं न तु पदवन्ध इत्यर्थः। ibid (P. 55). Thus in 'अविन्दु-सुन्दरी नित्यं गलल्लावण्यबिन्दुका' the main figure according to Udbhaṭa and Indurāja is Ślesa which gives rise to the faint image of Virodha.
5. The original borrows from K. P. : न चायमुपमाप्रतिभोत्पत्तिहेतुः श्लेषः। अपि तु श्लेष-प्रतिभोत्पत्तिहेतुरुपमा। तथा हि। यथा कमलमिव मुखं मनोज्ञमेतत्कचतितरामित्यादौ गुणसाम्ये क्रियासाम्य उभयसाम्ये वोपमा&c। P. 425.

7. The original borrows here from K. P. : न च कमलमिव मुखमित्यादिः साधारणधर्मशुन्य उपमाविषय इति वक्तुं युक्तम्। पूर्णोपमाया निर्विषयत्वापत्तेः। (P. 426.)

For in that case Pūrṇopamā would be impossible, for there all the four limbs of Upamā are present. Moreover Śleṣa can exist independently of another figure of speech. For example (p. 191, l. 9.):

"deva tvam eva [1] pātālam āśānāñ ca nibandhanaṁ |
tvañ cāmaramarud bhūmir eko loka-trayātamakaḥ". ||

In the above verse there is no other figure than Sleṣa, which proves that it can exist independently of Upamā etc.

(p. 191, l. 11) If the two (i. e. Upamā and Śleṣa) [2] are present together (as in svayañ ca &c) it is a case of the commixture (saṁkara) of the two. Though it is proper to say that in that verse there is Upamā, otherwise Pūrṇopama would be robbed of its province.

(p. 191, l. 12) Rudraṭaś definition of Śleṣa is then discussed [3]. Rudraṭa divides Śleṣa into eight varieties viz Śleṣa pertaining to letter (varṇa), word (pada), gender (liṅga), base (prakṛti), termination (pratyaya) and number (vacana). [4] Namisādhu [5] remarks here that some include liṅga-'śleṣa' under Pada-śleṣa; Vibhakti–and Vacana-śleṣa under Pratyaya-śleṣa & so on. But this is not fair, for these varieties are distinctly different (p. 191, l. 16). In Pada-śleṣa too the pada e.g. hāra has several meanings viz' 'a necklace'; 'taking away (stealing)'; and also 'that which belongs to Śiva (Hara); etc., Here there is no 'liṅga-śleṣa', for in all senses 'hāra' is masculine. Similarly when the pada is not different, gender may be different e.g. (p. 191, l. 17) 'Padma'. In masculine it means, 'one of the nine treasures'; in neuter it means, 'lotus' and in feminine it means, 'Lakṣmī'. Hence these varieties are quite all right.

(p. 191, l. 18) Bhoja's [6] ill. of Pada-ślesa is discussed:

arimedaḥ palāśaś ca bāhuḥ kalpadrumaś ca te |
bālevodyānamāleyam sālakānana-śobhinī || [7]

He includes Liṅga-śleṣa, and Pratyaya-śleṣa, treated as distinct varieties by Rudraṭa, in Prakṛti-ślesa and Pada-śleṣa. It is obvious that Namisādhu does not refer to Bhoja in his Ṭippaṇa on R. K. L, IV, 2 inasmuch as the latter includes Liṅga-śleṣa under Prakṛti-śleṣa, and not under Pada-śleṣa and treats Vibhakti-śleṣa, and Vacana-śleṣa, separately.

S. K. II. V. 160 (p, 125). The second half of this verse is K. D. II 29 cd. It is Daṇḍiś ill. of samānopamā and śleṣa-pratibhotpatti-hetu-upamā according to him. It is interesting to note that such cases of mere verbal similarity between the upamāna and the upameya are ills. of upamā according to Daṇḍī.

Here the uninflicted forms (prātipadikas) expressed by the series of nouns are called Padas, for termination etc. are not emphasised in the context. The words 'arimedaḥ' and so on have double meanings, in the first line.

(7) Citra (p. 191, l. 19)[1]: This is treated as an alaṁkāra, for the first time by Rudraṭa[2]. The original borrows from Rudraṭa and Viveka from Namisādhu[3]. The definition of Citra[4] is not traceable here.

This figure has got several varieties. Rudraṭa gives several varieties only illustratively[5]. These are not traceable in Viveka.

[4] vide R. K. L. V. 1. Nami. on this explains Citra thus: 'चित्रसादृश्यादाश्चर्याद्वा चित्रं नामालंकारः ।

The word 'Citra is used in two senses in K. P.:
In the 1st. Ullāsa it is used to denote the third type of Poetry which is avyaṅgya. The word 'avyaṅgya' is variously interpreted. Some think that it means 'īṣadvyaṅgya'—that is to say, wherein vyaṅgya is not easily detectable. Others think that it means 'without vyaṅgya' (vide Pradīpa and Udyota on K. P. I. 5). Mammaṭa seems to favour the first view as he explains avyaṅgya as 'sphuṭa-pratīyamānārtha-rahitam' (K. P.—P, 19). [also cf sphuṭasya rasasya anupalambhād avyaṅgyam etat kāvya-dvayam uktam (K. P. VI—p. 243)] Kumāra Svāmi quotes in his commentary on Pratāparudra-yaśo-bhūṣaṇa: 'anulbaṇatvāt vyaṅgyasya avyaṅgyaṁ citram īritam/.' In short, citra in a wider sense means the third class of Poetry, which includes all the figures of sound as well as sense. In the narrower sense it means 'a particular type of figure of sound.' Here it is used in this signification. Ratneśvara remarks (vide रत्नेश्वर S. K. II. 109) that Kāśmīrians call this citra because like a picture this also is life-less. But he does not accept this view. According to him this is called citra because it causes surprise (āścarya).

[5] He says, " भेदैर्विभिद्यमानं संख्यातुमनन्तमस्मि नैतदलम् । तस्मादेतस्य मया दिङ्मात्रमुदाहृतं कवयः ॥ R. K. L V. 4.

We do not find here the ills. discussed from the original. But they were positively given there. Viveka gives its own illustrations of this Alaṁkāra afterwards. Even though citra is admitted to the fold of Alaṁkaras, writers like Mammaṭa do not much approve of citra. Mammaṭa points out that citra is kaṣṭa-kāvya (disagreeable poetry—K. P.—p. 431) hence he has merely showed the direction. Again he remarks that though several varieties of citra are possible yet they do not rise to the level of poetry hence they are not illustrated. They are merely calculated to parade the ability of the poet [K. P.—(p. 433)]. Rudraṭa has not tried scientifically to classify this figure, as Bhoja and Hemacandra have done. In Daṇḍī we find an indirect attempt at this type of classification. According to Bhoja Citra is sixfold according as it belongs to varṇa, sthāna, svara, ākāra, gati or bandha. But even Bhoja confesses that Citra is difficult to practise (duṣkara), harsh (kaṭhora) and difficult to understand (durbodha) and what is more, endless, innumerable (vināvadhi). He, therefore, claims to point out the direction, the rest he leaves to the fertile imagination of the great (vide S. K. II. 130). At the end of Bandha type of Citra, Bhoja gives various types of Dhenu-ślokas, which are called Dhenu because like a cow (dhenu) giving birth to several calves (tarṇakas) these verses give rise to several new verses (tarṇaka-ślokas), if the words thereof are permuted according to certain conditions.

(p. 191. l. 24) The original borrows the treatment of Dhenu-śloka type of Bandha-Citra from Bhoja's S. K.. Several varieties of Dhenu-ślokas are given and Viveka has worked out the details with mathematical accuracy. The proof of these calculations is also given in detail.

(i) Śata-dhenu (p. 191, l. 24): This is defined as a verse which gives rise to a hundred new verses with different metres, if the several yatis are combined in various ways irrespective of the order.[1]

In the ili.[2] which is quoted in extenso in Viveka (p. 195, l. 3) there are seven breaks and if the different yatis were combined in various ways we get on the whole 127 combinations.[3]

Out of these combinations 25 are meaningless.[4] In six of them there is no kriyā (kriyā-hīna); in two there is no kāraka (kāraka-hīna); in one there is neither kriyā nor kāraka; 12 are mere portions of padas and hence meaningless; 2 contain kāraka yet as they have a portion of a pada (vocable) they are meaningless; in one there is neither kriyā nor kāraka but contains a fragment of a word hence fails to convey any sense; and in one combination mere fragment of a word is there which

1. The definition of Śata-dhenu is thus given by Bhoja :

यतिविच्छेदिनी ह्येषा श्लोकधेनुरनुत्तमा । छन्दोभेदाच्छतमियं प्रसूते श्लोकतर्णकान् ॥ S. K. II. 117.

2 This verse is quoted by Hemacandra as an ill. of Pramodamohodaya metre in his Chandonuśāsana (p. 88).

3. If one yati at a time is taken there will be seven combinations, if two are taken there will be 21 combinations, 35 if three at a time are taken, 35 if four at a time are taken, and so on. Adding up we get $(7+21+35+35+21+7+1)=127$ total combinations, the order being immaterial. The combinations go on increasing in Geometrical progression thus : with the first yati 1 combination, 2 with the second, 4 with the third and so on upto 64 with the seventh yati. Adding up we get (P. 194, l. 27) $1+2+4+8+16+32+64=127$. The reading at P. 14, l. 16 should be: ५६/१५६/२५६/१२५६/३५६/ &c. At P. 194, l. 27 it should be अघोघः (and not अबोधः). and at P. 194, l. 28 it should be प्रथमयायत्यैको (and not प्रथमा यत्या).

4. According to Ratne'svara 26 combinations are meaningless (vide Ratneśvara on S.K.II.117).

is obviously meaningless. In all there are 6+2+1+12+2+1+1=25 such meaningless combinations [1]

(ii) Sahasra-dhenu (p. 200, l. 21): This is defined by Bhoja, as a verse which yields 1,000 fresh verses (tarṇaka-ślokāḥ) with different metres if the words therein are combined in various ways. The ill. [2] is in Sudhākalaśa metre. In the second and third pāda 'ca' is in excess. In the third and last 'na' and 'nava' are respectively in excess, but these are all negligible. Hence broadly speaking six words in each pāda of this verse are to be combined in several ways, and we get a thousand new verses.

If the order is immaterial the total combinations available when the six pādas are combined in different ways, would be only (1+2+4+8+16+32=)63. But we have to get 1000 new verses [3] hence order is material If so, the number of combinations [4] would be 6! (factorial six) i. e. to say, 6×5×4×3×2×1=720. Then Viveka points out that the alternative combinations of the first half of the verse under discussion are 10, similarly 10 each are the combinations of the third and the fourth pāda, by multiplying these we get, (10×10×10=) 1,000 combinations.

(iii) Ayuta-dhenu (p. 206, l. 22): It is a verse [5] having a noun in the Vocative in the beginning, the rest of the words being verbs, and giving

1. The meaningless combinations are all pointed out in details in Viveka (vide P. 191,l. 24 ff). If we illustrate we may point out that with the first yati we can have Atyuktā metre : वन्द्या देवैः । सिद्धैः वीरैः ॥ which would be meaningless, with the second yati we have the following meaningful verse : देवी स्तुत्या । ध्येया पूज्या ॥ and so on. With the first, second, and fourth yatis we can have verses in Atyuktā metre, with the third, and fifth we can have verses in Supratiṣṭhā metre; with the sixth we can have verses in Gāyatri metre and with the seventh yati we can have verses in Uṣṇik metre, and so on, by combining the yatis. There are several misprints on this page. We merely point out the most important : P. 192, l. 24 it should be षोडश, षष्ट्या &c.; P. 192, l. 26 it should be इति दश, चतुष्कयोगाः etc; P. 192, l. 28 it should be इति दश, पञ्चकयोगाः P. 192, l. 29 it should be इति पञ्च, षड्योगाः etc.

rise to ten thousand new verses, in different metres if its constituent words are combined in several ways, the order being material. The ill. is borrowed from Bhoja [1]. It is a verse in Pṛthvī metre [2] and contains six padas in each quarter. In each quarter we get ten alternative combinations. By multiplying these we get (10×10×10×10=) 10,000 new verses. [3]

(iv) Lakṣa-dhenu (p. 207, l. 27): It is a verse having a single verb, the rest of the words being the nouns in the Vocative case, and giving rise to three lakhs and sixty thousand new verses. [4]

The ill. is borrowed from Bhoja's S. K. [5] There are nine padas in the first three quarters and ten in the last. The metre is Sragdharā. The total number of combinations is 3,60,000. [6] But if some of these words are repeated on account of confusion etc. the number of combinations would be ten lakhs (Prayuta) and the verse would be, then, a Prayutadhenu i. e. to say, a verse giving rise to one million fresh verses when its words are permuted in several ways, including cases of repetitions due to confusion etc. (sambhramādibhiḥ). [7]

(v) Koṭi-dhenu (p. 211, l. 4): This is defined as a verse containing several padas with Vocative or Accusative or Locative endings as well as having

S. K. II. v. 341 (P. 291).

Here क्रिये is the Vocative of the noun क्रिया, the rest of the padas in the verse are verbs. It is likely that there is a misprint in the third line for स्तुषे is repeated.

2. It is noteworthy that the remarks in the original on these verses are very much similar to those in Ratneśvara's comments on them (vide Ratneśvara on S. K. II vv. 339. to 344 on Pp. 290, 291, 292, 293 and 295).

verbs and yielding three and a half crores of new verses when its constituent padas are combined in various ways.[1]

The ill. is borrowed from S. K. of Bhoja.[2] It has different padas some are verbs, some are nouns either with Vocative-ending or with Locative-endings or with Accusative-endings. Each quarter contains eleven padas. The metre is Bhujaṅga-vijṛmbhita. It yields three crores and a half verses in several metres. If the words in this verse are repeated due to confusion etc. it brings fourth ten crores of calf-verses.[3]

(vi) Kāma-dhenu (p. 219, l. 17): As its name suggests, this verse should give rise to as many verses as you desire to have, by combining in several ways its constituent padas. As a matter of fact it does give rise to innumerable verses, when its padas are permuted. It is defined[4] as a verse which yields, at your sweet will, Parārdha Parārdha verses, when its padas are permuted in a number of ways.

The detailed calculations are given in Viveka (P. 216, l. 15 onwards). On P. 216, l. 3 it should be (वान्तेऽव) क्र इति न्यायेन। On P. 219 the reading (l.7) should be "शततमे नवनवति शतानि यावत् (as it is in ms. ग), This is an Arithmetic Progression and the nth term of an A.P. i.e. $T_n = a+(n-1)d$, where a is the first term (here, 0), d is the common difference (here, 100); so that the 100th term of this A.P.i.e. $T_{100} = 0+(100-1)\,100 = 9900$.
Therefore, नवनवतिशतानि is the correct reading here.

4. पदग्राहाद्यथाकामं कामधेनुरियं तु वः ।

According to this we get $10^{17} \times 10^{17} = 10^{34}$ number of combinations by permuting the padas of this Kāma-dhenu.

The ill. of Kāma-dhenu[1] also is borrowed from Bhoja's[2] S. K.. It contains fifteen padas in each quarter and yields innumerable verses when the constituent padas are permuted in several variations.

(p. 224, l. 1) Then are given the illustrations of different types of Citra like Varṇa-citra, Sthāna-citra, Svara-citra, Ākāra-citra, Gati-citra and Bandha-citra.[3]

(ii) Sthāna citra (p. 224, l. 13): Verses containing letters belonging to only particular places of utterance e. g. having no gutturals, or palatals or dentals, or labials or linguals or having neither dentals nor gutturals and so on.

(iii) Svara-citra (p. 224, l. 26) : Verses having only one or two or three short or long vowels, or having different vowels after each consonant or conversely having no vowel except akāra after each consonant.

(iv) Ākāra-citra (p. 225, l. 13) : Verses whose letters can be arranged in some particular shape e. g. of a lotus with four, eight or sixteen petals or of a circle. etc.

[2] The detailed calculations are given in Viveka (P, 219, l, 19 onwards). On P. 223, l.4., the reading अशीत्यधिकपद्शतोपेत &e is incorrect, it should be अशीत्यधिकषट्शतोपेत-सहस्रपरिकलिते&c., for when four Padas out of eight are permuted we get (8 × 7 × 6 × 5 =) 1680 permutations in all.

[3] The author of Viveka derives the illustrations of all types of citra by permuting several padas in the illustration of Kāma–dhenu verse quoted in fn. 1 above.

[4] These are य, र, त भ, ज, स म and न.
[cf 'म्यरस्तजभ्नगा लान्ताश्छन्दोविचितिवेदिभिः ।

(v) Gati-citra (p. 226, l. 1): Several types of this variety are illustrated. Palindromic verses which read the same backwards as forwards, or verses giving rise to those in another language when read backwards, Sarvatobhadra,[1] Turaṅga—padāgatam[2] etc. are included under this variety of Citra.

(vi) Bandha-citra (p. 226, l. 19): Several types of this are illustrated e.g. Dvi-catuṣka–bandha, Dviśṛngātaka-bandha, Cakra-bandha, Śarayantra-bandha, Vyoma-bandha, Muraja-bandha as well as Khaḍga-bandha.[3]

(p. 227, l. 21) Then are given the other varieties of Citra, like Bindu-cyutaka, Mātrā-cyutaka[4] etc. These are dealt with by several earlier writers like Rudraṭa, Bhoja etc, but they are more for fun rather than for embellishing Poetry[5]. Thereafter some from amongst the 24 Sabdālaṁkāras accepted by Bhoja are treated of.

(i) A variety of Jāti is probably illustrated at (p. 228, l. 2).[6]

1. Defined in S. K. II. 110 cd. It is a verse artificially so arranged that it reads the same from all sides.

2. This is a verse which yields another verse when its constituent monosyllabic padas are arranged in the manner prescribed in the following verse:

श्रीर्त्रिंशन्नवविंशतित्रयजिनश्रीकण्ठषड्विंशती– न्दूनाविंशतियुग्मपौषदशभावेदत्रयोविंशतिं ।
सत्रिंशद्द्विपसत्कलाभुवनतत्षड्वर्गवर्णाशुम–
त्सेनापक्षसुलक्षणस्वरसभासार्कद्विविंशाः शराः ॥—काव्यकल्पलता of अमरचन्द्र (P. 97)

The above can be put in a tabular form thus :

१	३०	९	२०	३	२४	११	२६
१६	१९	२	२९	१०	२७	४	२३
३१	८	१७	१४	२१	६	२५	१२
१८	१५	३२	७	२८	१३	२२	५

If the padas in the illustration given in Viveka (P. 22b, ll. 12–13) be arranged according to the above verse it yields the other verse given in Viveka (P. 226, ll. 14–15).

3. These are illustrated by Bhoja, but khaḍga is not, hence Viveka-kāra calls it Anukta (vide Viveka P. 227, l. 5. & S. K. II. 125).

4. The ill. of Mātrā–cyuta is borrowed from H. K. S. (P. 315) :
" भूतियोजितभर्तव्यः कृपणाक्रान्तमण्डलः । "

5. cf. R. K. L. III. 59 and Namisādhu's comments thereon :

भीष्मप्रोक्तानि वाक्यानि...गोसे तिविङ्छिरिङ्छोली &c । S. K. II v. 11.

(ii) The varieties of Gati, a Śabdālamkāra according to Bhoja, are treated of at p. 228, l. 2. [1]

(iii) The illustrations of Rīti, Vṛtti, Chāyā, Mudrā and Ukti are not traceable. The varieties of Yukti are treated at p. 228, l. 3 ff.[2]

(iv) Bhaṇati is dealt with at (p. 228, l. 7). [3]

(v) Then Vāko-vākya is treated of. [4]

(vi) Citrābhinaya-vad [5] is the last of the Śabdālamkāras treated of by Bhoja in his S. K. The ill. of Sāmānyābhinayavad [6] alone is traceable in Viveka. This is borrowed from Bhoja.

SECTION IV

In this section arthālamkāras—figures of speech pertaining the sense (artha) are dealt with. The diversity of opinions among Sanskrit rhetoricians as regards the number[1], names,[2] varieties[3] etc. of arthālaṁkāras makes the problem of alaṁkāra very intricate.

[4] Vākovākya is defined at S. K. II. 131. It has six varieties, of which the ill. of only one type of Citrokti is traceable. It is लभ्यते यदि वाञ्छितानि यमुनाभागीरथीसंगमे etc ।
S. K. II. v. 356.

[5] Is it possible that those Śabdālamkāras which are not traceable in Viveka, but treated of in S. K., were not accepted by the author of Kalpalatā ?

[6] The ill is : (P. 228, l. 20)

राहोश्चन्द्रकलामिवाननचरीं दैवात्समासाद्य मे दस्योरस्य कृपाणपातविषयादाच्छिन्दतः प्रेयसीम् । &c.
—S. K. II. v. 400 (P. 310).

Here all the four types of abhinayas are described. The first half contains āhārya, the second has āṅgika, the first half of the verse has vācika and the second half has sāttvika type of abhinaya.

The arthālaṁkāras [4] are critically treated in Kalpalatā and Viveka.

At the outset the original gives the broad divisions of arthālaṁkāras according to Rudraṭa, who divides them into four types viz Vāstava, Aupamya, Atiśaya and Śleṣa. All the other alaṁkāras are the varieties of the one or the other of these four.[5]

(p. 229, l. 1). Vāstava is defined as that wherein the description of the nature of facts is given so that it is neither redundant nor contrary to the facts described and is free from similitude, exaggeration and pun[6].

(p. 229, l. 21) Aupamya is defined as that where the speaker, in order to describe something as it is, refers to another thing similar to it.[7]
The nature of aupamya varies with the nature of the person expressing the similitude. Viveka illustrates how it differs according as the speaker is a lover (rakta), a recluse (virakta)[8] or an indifferent person (madhyastha).

(p. 230, l. 17) Atiśaya occurs when some time, contrary to popular belief, a thing is depicted as having qualities other than those it is generally known to possess.[9]

(p. 231, l. 5) Artha-śleṣa is that wherein a sentence consisting of multivocal words gives rise to more than one meaning.[10]

1. Bharata gives four, Bhāmaha 36, Daṇḍī 35, Vāmana 31, Udbhaṭa 37, Rudraṭa 66, Bhoja forty-eight, and Mammaṭa 62; whereas Hemacandra reduces the number to twenty-nine. Daṇḍī points out that alaṁkāras are too numerous to be set out exhaustively (vide K. D. II. i.).

   Certain alaṁkāras, like Hetu, Sūkṣma, Leśa, Rasavad, Ūrjasvi, Preyas, Āśis etc, are not accepted by Mammaṭa. Bhāmaha and Rudraṭa accept some of them, while Daṇḍī is an ardent advocate of the first three and accepts all of them.

2. There are some alaṁkāras which are given different names by different rhetoricians though they are essentially the same, whereas there are some alaṁkāras which are given the same name by different writers on poetics, though they are essentially quite different.

3. Daṇḍī gives nearly 32 varieties of Upamā. He includes Ananvaya etc. under Upamā. (K. D. II. 358). The varieties of Rūpaka according to Mammaṭa are eight. But Bhoja has twentyfour types of Rūpaka. The illustrations can easily be multiplied.

4. That is to say, including some of the Ubhayālaṁkāras of Bhoja.

5. R. K. L. VII. 2.

6. (ibid) VII. 10.

7. (ibid) VIII. I. The discussion of this Kārikā is borrowed from Namisādhuś comments on it.

8. The ill. of a विरक्त speaker in Namisādhu is : एता हसन्ति च रुदन्ति च etc. Mṛccha. IV. 14. The author of Viveka does not seem to be satisfied with it and naturally so, for Śarvilaka is not a recluse. Viveka, therefore, gives another more suitable hence better illustration (at P. 230, l. 11).

9. R. K. L. IX. I.

10. (ibid) X. I. Viveka here borrows from Namiś comments on the same.

There are 23 figures based on Vāstava, 21 on Aupamya, 12 on Atiśaya and 10 on Śleṣa according to Rudraṭa.

(1) Upamā (p. 231, l. 11): The relative importance of the Upamāna and the Upameya, the discussion of sādharmya together with the illustrations are borrowed from Hemacandra.[1]

(p. 242. l. 25) The discussion of Pūrṇā and Luptā types of Upamā along with their varieties and corresponding illustrations is based mainly on Kāvya-prakāśa.[2]

(p. 233, l. 18) The discussion of instances like, krūraḥ āyaḥ-śūlikaḥ etc. is based on Indurājaś Vṛtti[3], Mammaṭaś criticism of the same[4] and on Hemacandra's Viveka[5].

(p. 234, l. 7) Bhāmahaś definition, varieties, and illustrations of Upamā are discussed[6]

(p. 236, l. 15) Udbhaṭa's definition, divisions and illustrations of Upamā are reviewed. The original also draws upon Indurāja's Vṛtti[7].

(p. 237, l. 17) Rudraṭaś definition, varieties and some of the illustrations of Upamā are criticised. The original also draws upon Namisādhuś Tippaṇī.

(p. 238, l. 22) Vāmanaś definition of Upamā is discussed. His definition of Kalpitopamā and its illustrations are discussed. Viveka draws upon Vāmana[8].

(p. 240, l. 9) Upamā as given by Daṇḍī is discussed and its varieties are illustrated and criticised. According to Viveka Daṇḍī's Śleṣopamā is a case of saṁkara of Upamā and Śleṣa, though Mammaṭa would call it Upamā and Udbhaṭa Śleṣa.

(p 242, l, 12) Some varieties of Upamā like Kalpitopamā, Samuccitopamā etc, are reviewed. Some varieties of other alaṁkāras like Udbhaṭa's Vidarśanā are discussed[10].

(p. 244, l. 20) Some of the varieties of Luptopamā according to Bhoja[1] are criticised.

(p. 245, l. 4) Then follows a lengthy discussion on Upamā-doṣas. Several doṣas of Upamā, given by earlier writers beginning from Medhāvi down to Hemacandra, are discussed. The original naturally draws upon earlier writers like Bhāmaha, Mammaṭa[2], Rudraṭa[3], and Vāmana[4]. It is not clear as to how many doṣas the author accepts. He does not accept Nyūnatā and Adhikatā as doṣas of Upamā but as those of Vākya.[5]

(4) Utprekṣā (p. 251, l. 85): Viveka discusses how 'iva' may give rise to Upamā and not to Utprekṣā even when it does not immediately come after the upamāna.[7]

The first illustration is not traceable. The second is borrowed from Bhoja along with his remarks thereon.[10]

(8) Śleṣa (p. 256, l. 12): Mammaṭa's definition of this figure is discussed[1]. The ill. under discussion is (p. 256, l. 13) :

udayam ayate diṅ-mālinyam...vibhati vibhākaraḥ //[2]

(p. 256, l. 19) The question as to whether Śleṣa deserves a separate status as a figure of sense is discussed here onwards[3].

(p. 256, l. 21) Bhāmaha points out that the distinction between Śleṣa and Rūpaka consists in the expression of the upamāna and uyameya in the former by one word.[4]

(p. 256, l. 25) The ill. of Rūpaka quoted by him to illustrate this distinction is called into question.[5]

(p. 257, l. 10) Śleṣa is distinguished from figures exclusively belonging to sound, like Yamaka, Anuprāsa etc.

(p. 260, l. 14) Rudraṭa's ten varieties of Śleṣa are reviewed.[10] It is pointed out that his virodha[11], vyāja[12], asaṁbhava[13], avayava[14], tattva[15] and virodhābhāsa[1] types of Śleṣa are not distinct from virodha, vyājastuti, vyatireka, rūpaka, rūpaka and virodha respectively, which are accepted as distinct figures. The ills. are not all traceable here.[2]

(p. 261, l. 18) Vāmana's definition of Śleṣa[3] is probably discussed.

The other variety of Nidarśanā occurs when a mere action conveys the connection between itself (sva) and its cause (sva-hetu).[7] The ill is (p. 263, l. 10) :

These being further divided into ṛju and vakra each according as the example is direct or indirect.[2]

The illustrations of all the varieties except the first and the fifth are given from Bhoja.[3]

(p. 265, l. 1.) Bhojaś varieties of this figure are discussed. The ill. of Aprastuta-praśansā involving express violation of dharma is:

(15) Dīpaka (p. 265, l. 25)[11]: The discussion of this figure is probably borrowed from Hemacandra[12].

(p. 266, l. 2) According to Rudraṭa Dīpaka comes under his Vāstava set. He does not include it under Aupamya. So he does not accept similarity as the basis of this figure unlike Udbhaṭa who emphasises it.[13] The illustrations given by Rudraṭa also contain other figures like Kāraṇa-mālā etc[14]

(p. 269, l. 87) Bhāmaha's definition of Ākṣepa is discussed.[2]

(p. 269, l.88) Bhāmaha's ill. of the second variety of Akṣepa is discussed:

ko vā hetur alaṁ sindhor vikāra-karaṇaṁ prati / etc.[3]

(p. 269, l 20) Indurāja's explanation of Ākṣepa is under discussion.[4]

(p. 269, l. 25) Udbhaṭa's ill. of the first variety of Ākṣepa is criticised

aho smarasya mahātmyaṁ yad Rudre 'pi daśedṛśī / etc.[5]

(p. 270, l, 4) Udbhaṭa's ill. of the second variety of Ākṣepa is;

These ills. are called into question by Kalpalatā.[7]

(p. 270, l. 11) The ills. of some of the varieties of Ākṣepa given by Daṇḍī are discussed.[8]

(p. 270, l. 15) Bhoja divides Ākṣepa into vidhyākṣepa and niṣedhākṣepa each being further divided into śuddha and miśra types.[9] He points out that Rodha (suppression) is not distinct from Ākṣepa,[10] the former has all the four varieties of the latter and these are further divided into ukti and yukti types. Thus Rodha has eight varieties.[11]

(p. 270, l. 22) The varieties of Rodha are illustrated.[12]

(21) Viśeṣokti[2] (p. 271, l. 23) : Bhāmaha's definition of the figure is discussed.[3]

(p. 272, l. 1) Viśeṣokti is explained probably from Mammaṭa's point of view.[4]

(p. 272, l. 4) Bhoja's ill. of Viśeṣokti involving deficiency of things (dravya-vaikalya) is :

na rathā na ca mātaṅgā na hayā na ca pattayaḥ |
strīṇām apāṅga-dṛṣṭyaiva jīyate jagatāṁ trayam || [5]

(p. 272, l. 6) The ill. of Viśeṣokti having deficient things is :

(p. 272, l. 8) Bhoja's ill. of Viśeṣokti is discussed ;

Here there is Viśeṣokti even though there is no deficiency.

(p. 272, l, 14) Bhoja's definition of the figure Ahetu[8], a distinct figure according to him, is discussed. It seems to have been included under Viśeṣokti by Kalpalatā.

(p. 272, l. 17)[9] Bhoja includes Kāraṇa-mālā[10] under Ahetu,[11] which latter is not considered distinct from Viśeṣokti by the author of Kalpalatā.

Rudraṭa treats Ahetu as an independent figure (vide R, K. L. IX, 54).

[9] The paragraphing is unwarrantable here.

[10] S. K. III. 19 and 20. Rudraṭa defines and illustrates this figure for the first time. (R. K. L. VII. 84).

[11] S. K. III. 19 : "सोऽप्यहेतोर्न भिद्यते ।"

Bhoja divides Kāraṇa-malā into two types according as the causes are expressed (abhidhīyamāna) or suggested (pratīyamāna)[1]. The latter variety is included under Vibhāvanā by Kalpalatā, whereas the first type is treated of as an independent figure.[2]

The ill.[3] of suggested series of causes is disussed here.

(22) Yathā-saṅkhya (p. 272, l. 18)[4]: Mammaṭa's ill. of this figure discussed here is :

ekas tridhā vasasi cetasi citram atra etc. [5]

(p. 272, l. 19) Rudraṭa's definition of complex Yathā-saṅkhya is discussed.[6] The ills. are not traceable.[7]

(p. 272, l. 21) The discussion of krama, the name given to Yathāsaṅkhya by Daṇḍī[8], Bhoja and others, is borrowed wholesale from S. K. [9].

The six varieties of krama given by Bhoja are discussed[10],

(23) Arthāntara-nyāsa (p. 273. l. 2): Bhāmaha's definition of the figure is under discussion.[11]

Then follows a discussion explaining how Arthāntara-nyāsa differs from Aprastuta-praśansā and Dṛṣṭānta. The original probably draws upon Udbhaṭa and Indurāja.[12]

(24) Virodha (p. 274, l. 20)[1]: Hemacandra's definition of Virodha is under discussion[2]. Hemacandra includes all the figures based on mutual contradiction e. g. Vibhāvanā, Viśeṣokti, Viṣama, Asaṅgati, Adhika, Vyāghāta, Tadguṇa etc., under Virodha. Bhoja includes Asaṅgati, Pratyanīka, Adhika and Viṣama under Virodha.

(p. 274, l. 28) Rudraṭa includes Virodha under his Atiśaya set and deals with thirteen varieties of Virodha. The ill. of guṇa-virodha is under discussion:

satyaṁ tvam eva saralo jagati jarā–janita-kubja-bhavo'pi / etc.[3].

(p. 275, l. 1) This is Rudraṭaś ill. of kriyā-virodha.[4]

(p. 275, l. 2) not traced.

(p. 275, l. 3) This is Bhojaś ill. of Asaṅgati-virodha[5]

(25) Svabhāvokti (p. 275, l. 4)[6]: The definition of Svabhāvokti, also called Jāti[7], is discussed.

Bhoja gives several varieties of this figure, which were probably mentioned[8] and illustrated in the original. No illustration is traceable.

(26) Vyāja-stuti (p. 275, l. 9): The definition of this figure is explained:

Praise by resorting to the artifice of censure (vyājena) or censure in the form of (i. e. false, vyāja-rūpā) praise is Vyāja-stuti.[9]

The ills. given in the original are borrowed from Bhoja. He includes Vyāja-stuti under Leśa,[3] and borrows the ills. from Daṇḍī,[4] who treats Leśa and Vyāja-stuti separately[5].

(p. 276, l. 1) Bhojaś ill. of Leśa resulting from the implicit mention of guṇa and doṣa (samāsoktyā) is discussed.[6] The ill. of Leśa resulting from the explicit mention of guṇa-doṣa is not traceable here.[7]

he hasta dakṣiṇa mṛtasya śiśor dvijasya / etc. [2]

(p. 276, l. 21) The verses under discussion are:

ucyatāṁ sa vacanīyam aśeṣaṁ, neśvare paruṣatā sakhi sādhvī / [3] etc, and

(p. 277, l. 15) The distinction between Samāsokti and Sahokti is pointed out. Viveka probably suggests that the Sahokti as defined by Bhāmaha is not acceptable to the author. The definition given by Bhāmaha is quoted here to represent other writers also, who follow Bhāmahaś view about this figure.

(28) Parivṛtti (p. 277, l. 20) [6]: Bhāmahaś definition [7] of this figure is discussed along with Udbhataś. [8]

(p, 278, l. 3) Rudraṭaś definition of Parivṛtti [9] is discussed.

Bhoja divides Parivṛtti into three types [10]: vyatyavatī, vinimayavatī and ubhayavatī, each of these being further divided into two types viz. mukhya and amukhya according as the exchange is primarily expressed or metaphorical.

praṇayi-sakhi-salīla-parihāsa etc. /[2]

(p. 278, l. 25) Rudraṭa deals with a figure called Hetu[3]. It is not accepted by Bhāmaha,[4] Mammaṭa[5] etc. But Daṇḍī accepts it and illustrates several varieties of Hetu.[6]

(p. 279, l. 5) Rudraṭaś ill. of Hetu[7] is discussed. It seems that the original accepts Hetu.

(p. 279. l. 10) The definition of Hetu[8] given by Bhoja is discussed. The ill. of the four varieties of Hetu viz. efficient (kāraka),[9] probative (jñāpaka)[10], negative (abhāva)[11] and diverse (citra)[12] given by Bhoja are discussed- Bhoja borrows some of these from Daṇḍī[13]

(31) Paryāyoktam (p. 279, l. 23)[14] : Mammaṭaś ill. of this figure is under discussion:

yaṁ prekṣya cira-rūḍhā'pi etc. /[15]

Here the vyaṅgya is stated in so many words.

(33) Samuccaya (p. 280, l. 18)[5]: Kalpalatā[6] does not seem to accept some of the varieties of this figure given by Rudraṭa[7].

(p. 280, 20) The definition of Samuccaya according to Rudraṭa[8] is discussed. The ill. of the conjunction (samuccaya) of good things (sādhu-dravya) is:

Umā vadhur bhavān dātā yācitāra ime vayam /[9] etc.

The ill. of the conjunction of unpleasant things (asādhu dravya) is:

(p. 281, l. 10) The ill. of the first variety of Samuccaya according to Rudraṭa is discussed.

R. K. L. VII. 20. (Kāvy-malā Ed. reads त्रिकूटम्). The verse is quoted as ill. of Samuccayokti by Bhoja in his Sṛ. Prakāśa (p. 419). with slightly different readings.

(p. 281, l. 10) The ill. of kriyā-Samuccaya is discussed:

prasphurann adharoṣṭhaṁ, gātraṁ romāñcayaṅ giraḥ skhalayan /[1] etc.

(p. 281, l. 14)[2] Bhojaś definition of Samuccaya is discussed and its several varieties as given by him are treated.[3]

(p. 281, l. 20) The ill. of ubhaya-padāśraya-kriyā-samuccaya[4] is not traceable.

(p. 281, l. 21) Bhoja points out that anvācaya is not distinct from Samucaaya[5]. After illustrating several varieties of the latter he remarks that the scope of anubhaya type of Samuccaya and Anvācaya has already been captured by Dīpaka.[6] He, therefore, directly illustrates itaretara-yoga type of Anvācaya (involving mutual connection between the actions and their subject):

sāvaśeṣa-padam uktam upekṣā srasta-mālya-vasanābharaṇeṣu /[7] etc.

(p. 282, l. 1) The ill. of itaretara-yoga type of Sammucaya involving the use of 'ca' after the uttara-pada is:

tat kṣaṇaṁ viparivartita-hriyor neṣyataḥ śayanam iddha-rāgayoḥ /

Read क्रियाद्रव्याविशेषाः in the text, it is a compound.
8. S. K. IV. v. 143. The original borrows from Bhoja's vṛtti introducing this verse: चयोगेऽपीतरेतरयोगः । etc. (p. 490).

(p. 282, l. 6) The ill. of Samāhāra type of Anvacaya pertaining to action (kriyā-viṣaya) involving the use of 'ca' after the uttarapada is:

gacchantīnām ramaṇa.vasatim /[2] etc.

(34) Paryāya (p. 282, l. 10): Mammaṭaś ill. of the second variety of Paryāya is under discussion:

tad gehaṁ nata.bhitti mandiram idam labdhāvakāśaṁ divaḥ /[3] etc.

Mammaṭa points out in his vṛtti on this verse that this is Paryāya and not Parivṛtti[4] as the giving away of one thing (hāna) and receiving of another (upādāna), by one and the same agent is not intended.[5]

(p. 282. l. 12) Rudrataś first variety of Prayāya is under discussion.[6] Namisādhu points out that Paryāya is distinct from both the types of Bhāva[7].

(p. 282, l. 19) Bhojaś ills. of Paryāya are discussed.[8]

[1] S. K. IV. (p. 491). This also an ill. of kriyā-Samuccaya (vide S. K. IV. v. 139.)

[2] (ibid) IV, 144 (This is मेघदूत 39). The original here borrows from Bhoja's vṛtti सोऽयं भिन्नकालत्वभिन्नविषयत्वाभ्यामन्वाचयः समुच्चयाद् भिन्नो भवति । (p. 491). Bhoja points out a slight shade between Anvācaya and Samuccaya, but as a matter of fact, even according to Bhoja himself the former is a variety of the latter (cf अन्वाचय इहान्यो यः सोऽपि नान्यः समुच्चयात् । (S. K. IV 61) cf. also Bhoja: नन्वेवं, यदि समुच्चयेऽपि भिन्नविषये क्रिये तुल्यकालमेव :प्रयुज्येते, को दोषः स्यात् । :न कश्चित् । etc. (p. 491).

[6] R. K. L. VII. 42. Rudraṭa is the first rhetorician to define and illustrate this figure.

The original probably paraphrases and explains नमि० The ill. of प्रथमभाव is (p. 282, l. 12.): ग्रामतरुणं तरुण्या नववञ्जुलमञ्जरीसनाथकरम् etc, / R. K. L. VII. 39. This is Mammaṭa's ill, of गुणीभूतव्यङ्ग्य (Vide K. P. I. v. 3). The ill. of द्वितीयभाव is (p, 282, l, 17): एकाकिनी यदबला तरुणी तथाहम् etc. / R. K. L. VII. 41.

[8] S. K. IV, v. 213. The comments are borrowed by the original from Bhoja: अत्र 'कयाचिदेवं मिषतो विनिर्यये इत्युदर्काभिधानेनाकङ्क्षानिवृत्तेर्निराकाङ्क्षमेतन्मिषं नाम पर्यायमेदः ॥ (p. 535,)

(35) Anumāna (p. 282, l. 22): Rudraṭaś first variety of Anumāna[1] is not accepted by Mammaṭa. The orginal here follows, and borrows from Kāvya-prakāśa.[2]

(36) Parikara (p. 282, l. 25)[3]: The first ill. could not be traced.

(p. 283, l. 1) Rudraṭaś ill of Parikara is discussed:

kāryeṣu vighnitecchaṁ vihita-mahiyo' parādha-saṁvaraṇam / asmākam adhanyānām ārjavam api durlabhaṁ jātam //[4]

(p. 283, l. 7) Bhoja has given six types[5] of Parikara: kriyā[6], kāraka, sambandhi,[7] sādhya and dṛṣṭānta. Some of these are traceable here.

(p. 283, l. 11) When a verb is modified by words ending in kṛt terminations, taddhita terminations etc., the figure is kriyā-parikara[8]. The ill. is:
gehād yātā saritam udakaṁ hārikā nājihīṣe / etc.[9]

(p. 283, l. 16) The ill. of kriyā-parikara where the verb is modified by an adverb (avyayena)[10] is:
salīlam āsakta-latānta-bhūṣaṇaṁ samāsajantyā kusumāvataṁsakam / stanopapīdaṁ nunude nitambinā /[11] etc.

[9] S. K. IV. v. 177. The original borrows from Bhoja's vṛtti: एवं लक्षणादिषु शत्रादिभिरपि द्रष्टव्यम् । (p. 511)'

[10] The words "अव्ययेन यथा—" are borrowed from Bhoja S. K. (p. 512) who introduces his ill, above discussed, with these words. The reading 'अध्ययन' in Viveka (p, 283, l, 16) is obviously wrong.

[11] S. K. IV. v. 178 (p, 512) [it is किरात॰ VII. 16]. The original borrows from Bhoja,: एवं यथाविध्यनुप्रयोगादिश्वपि द्रष्टव्यम् । तेन क्रियायाः क्वचिदान्तरविशेषणयोगाव्यङ्ग्यत्वं भवतीत्यपि व्याख्यातम् । (p, 512). The separate paragraph from 'आन्तर' in Viyeka (p. 283. l, 22) is unwarranted.

(p. 283, l. 22) The ill. of āntara viśeṣaṇa kriyā-parikara is:

śayyante haṭa-śāyikāḥ etc. /[1]

(p. 283, l. 23) The ill. of kriyā-parikara when the verb is modified by an adverb phrase etc. is:

śataṁ vārān uktaḥ priya-sakhi etc.[2]

(p. 283, l. 25) Kriyā-parikara resulting from the use of the termination thāl which gives rise to adverbs of manner,[3] is discussed:

akṛta-kavalārambhair bhūyo bhaya-sthagitekṣaṇāḥ / ...
gaganam asakṛt paśyanty etas tathā'śru-ghanai mukhaiḥ etc. /[4]

Bhoja notes that the above variety includes kriyā-parikara, resulting from the inversion of 'tad' and 'yad', wherein the verb is modified due to repetition of the inversed adverbs.[5] The ill. is:

jaha jaha ṇisā samappae taha taha vevira-taraṅg-paḍimā etc.[6] /

(p. 284, l, 1) The definition of sambodhana-parikara is discussed:

kriyā-viśeṣaṇaṁ kaiścit sambodhanam apīṣyate / sambandhibhiḥ padair eva lakṣyante lakṣaṇādayaḥ //[7]

(p. 284, l. 4) Bhoja mentions the view of others,[8] according to whom Parikara lies in establishing the similitude (sādharmya) in figures like upamā, rūpaka, virodhā-śleṣa etc. by means of words or of meaning or of both. The ill. of śabda-kṛta-parikara in Upamā is not traceable.[9]

(p. 284, l. 5) In the ubhaya-kṛta-parikara the similitude between the contradictory senses is based on both (ubhaya) śabda and artha and results in virodha-śleṣa. [2]

(p. 284, l. 7) [3] Bhoja includes Ekāvalī under Parikara. It is threefold sabdaikāvalī, arthaikāvalī and ubhayaikāvalī according as it is based on word, meaning, or both. [4]

8. K. P. X. v. 521
9. In this dicussion it draws upon Kāvyaprakā'sa : न चैषापह्नुतिः प्रकृताप्रकृतोभयनिष्ठस्य साम्यस्येहासंभवात् । (P. 521).

(p. 284, l. 13) The verse under discussion probably is:

anurāgavatī sandhyā divasas tat puraḥsaraḥ /
aho daiva-gatiḥ kīdṛk-tathā'pi na samāgamaḥ //[1]

Here the context (prakaraṇa) is not known hence it is not possible to say what is prakṛta and what is aprakṛta. The figure of speech is either samāsokti or aprastutapraśansā.[2] It is a variety of Ahetu according to Bhoja[3].

(38) Parisaṅkhyā (p. 284, l. 16): Mammaṭaś definition of the figure is discussed.[4] The ill. under discussion is:

kim āsevyaṁ puṁsām, savidham anavadyaṁ dyu-saritaḥ /[5] etc.

(p. 284, l. 18) Rudraṭaś ills. of Parisaṅkhyā are discussed :

kauṭilyaṁ kaca-nicaye / etc.[6] and kiṁ sukhaṁ apāratantryam / etc.[7]

Rudraṭa divides each of the two varieties of Parisaṅkhyā viz. Pṛṣṭa and Apṛṣṭa, into four subvarieties according as the exclusion relates in each case to jāti, guṇa, kriyā or dravya.[8] The ills. of guṇa only in both the main types is given by Rudraṭa. Namisādhu points out the ill. of the exclusion of jāti in the first i. e. pṛṣṭa type of Parisaṅkhyā. It is slightly elaborated by Viveka (p. 284, l. 23):

ke brāhmaṇā yeṣāṁ satyaṁ dama ānṛśaṁsyam /[9] etc.

Viveka does not illustrate the other subvarieties of Parikara.[10]

1. The verse is quoted in ध्वन्यालोक (P, 114).
2. The figure is Samāsokti according to Bhāmaha and Ākṣepa according to Vāmana (Vide लोचन – P. 115).
3. S. K. III. v. 44. (P. 332) and Sr. Pr. Vol. II. (P. 397).

6. R. K. L. VII 81. and K. P. X. v. 524, Mammaṭaś third variety of परिसंख्या.
7. R. K L. VII. 80. The order of Rudrata's ills, of parisaṅkhyā is changed in Kalpalatā, because they are given according to K. P.. Rudrata's ill. of the second variety of parisaṅkhyā is Mammaṭa's ill. of the shird variety of that figure, whereas the former's ill. of the first variety of parisaṅkhyā is not quoted by Mammaṭa.
8. कारणमाला सेयं यत्र यथा पूर्वमेति कारणताम् । अर्थानां पूर्वार्थभ्दवतीदं सर्वमेवेति ।। R. K. L. VII. 79.
9. 'जातौ तु के ब्राह्मणा येषां सत्यमित्यादि द्रष्टव्यम् ।' नमिसाधु on R. K. L. VII. 80.
10. Viveka (P. 284, l. 25) remarks : एवं जातिद्रव्यक्रियास्वप्युदाहार्यम् । Namisādhu also does not supply the remaining ills.. He remarks : द्रव्यक्रियाजातिषु तु स्वयं द्रष्टव्यानि । (vide टिप्पण on R. K. L. VII. 81).

(39) Kāraṇa-mālā (p. 284, l. 26) Rudraṭaś definition of this figure is discussed [1]. The ill. is:

vinayena bhavati guṇavān guṇavati loko'nurajyate sakalaḥ / [2] etc.

(40) Anyo'nyam (p. 284, l. 27): Rudraṭaś definition of this figure is discussed. [3] The following verse is not Anyo'nya;

Kṛṣṇa-dvaipāyanaṁ Pārthaḥ siṣeve siṣyavat tataḥ |
asāv adhyāpayat taṁ tu vidyāṁ yoga-samanvitām || [4]

Here there is no Anyo'nya for sevana and adhyāpana are two distinct actions whereas in Anyo'nya there should be a single action. [5]

(p. 285, l. 2) Bhoja's ill. of pratīyamāna type of Anyo'nya is discussed, Here the mutual relation of upakārya and upakāraka existing between the actions of the traveller and the water-girl is suggested (pratīyamāna).[6]

(p. 285, l. 3) Bhoja's ill. of mixed (suggested as well as expressed) type of Anyo'nya is under discussion. [7]

(p. 285, l. 3) The ill. of Anyo'nya-bhrānti [8]. According to Bhoja it is not distinct from Anyo'nya.

(p. 285, l. 3) In the ill. of Anyo'nyātmakatā two hues (śyāma and pāṇḍu) are described as having become one due to mutual blending (vyatikareṇa). [9]

1. R. K, L. VII. 84. Rudraṭā is the first to define this figure.
2. (ibid) VII. 85.
3. (ibid). VII. 91. The discussion is based on Nami's ṭippaṇa on this Karikā.
4. Quoted by Nami on R. K. L. VII. 91.
5. In order to exclude such cases from Anyo'nya, Rudraṭa has used the word 'एकः' in his definition of that figure. In the illustration on hand the action is not one and the same.
6. उद्धच्छो पिअइ जलं जह जह विरलङ्गुली चिरं पहिओ । पाआवलिआ वि तह तह धारं तणुमम्पि तणुएई ।। S. K. III, v. 73. (P. 376).
   It is doubtful if this can be called Anyo'nya from Rudrata's and Mammaṭa's points of view for here the reciprocal influence is not brought about by a single action.
7. गोलाविसमोआरच्छलेण अप्पा उरम्मि से मुक्को ।

   The original borrows from Bhoja : अत्र गोदावरीविषमावतारव्याजेन तया तस्योरसि आत्मा क्षिप्तस्तेनाप्यनुकम्पानिर्दोषा (निर्दोषं ?) सा गाढमुपगूढेत्यभिधीयमानः प्रतीयते । etc (P. 347)

9. The reading 'व्यतिरेकेण' in the Nirnayasagar 2nd ed. of S. K. is a misprint, it should be 'व्यतिकरेण,' as it is in Viveka.

parsparena cchuritā'malacchavī tad eka-varṇāv iva tau babhūvatuḥ // [1]

(41) Uttara (p. 285, l. 5): Mammaṭa's definition of this figure is discussed:

uttara-śruti-mātrataḥ /

praśnasyonnayanaṁ yatra kriyate tatra vā sati / asakṛd yad asambhāvyam uttaraṁ syād tad Uttaram // [2]

Uttara is a distinct figure of speech. It is neither Kāvyaliṅga nor Anumāna. [3] (42) Sūkṣma (p. 285, l. 10): Mammaṭa's definition [4] of this figure is discussed. The ill. under discussion is:

vaktra-syandi-sveda-bindu-prabandhair dṛṣṭvā bhinnaṁ kuṅkumaṁ ka'pi kaṇṭhe / puṁstvaṁ tanvyā vyañjayntī vayasyā smitvā pāṇaukhaḍga-lekhāṁ lilekha // [5]

(p. 285, l. 12) The distinction between Hetu and Sūkṣma is pointed out. The former involves upacāra (similitude) whereas the latter involves lakṣaṇa-lakṣaṇā (Indication by exclusion of Primary sense).

(p. 285, l. 14) Bhoja's definition of Sūkṣma is discussed. [6]

(p. 285, l. 17) Bhoja's ill. of Sūkṣma is under discussion. [7]

(43) Sāra (p. 285, l. 17). Not quite traceable. Bhoja includes it under Uttara [8]. Probably this figure is not accepted by Kalpalatā [9].

1. This is an ill. of Anyo'nyātmakatā. The original borrows from Bhojas vṛtti on this verse: अत्र श्यामपाण्डुतयोः परस्परव्यतिकरेणैकवर्णकरणादन्योन्यमेकता नाम भ्रान्तिभेदोऽन्योन्यात्पृथगेव । (P. 348). Is it 'अन्योन्यादपृथगेव' here ? Yes, because Bhoja gives this as an ill. of Anyo'nyaikatā, (same as Anyo'nya), in his Sṛṅgāra-Prakāśa. (cf. अन्योन्यचुलिका अन्योन्यभ्रान्तिरन्योन्यैकता चान्योन्यमेव । Sr. Pr.—P. 400)
2. K. P. X. 121 and 122 ab The original actually quotes this definition as is clear from the words 'तत्र वा' in Viveka.
3. The original borrows from K. P. : न चैतत् काव्यलिङ्गम्। उत्तरस्य ताद्रूप्यानुपपत्तेः न हि प्रश्नस्य प्रतिवचनं जनको हेतुः। नापीदमनुमानम्। एकधर्मिनिष्टतया साध्यसाधनयोरनिर्देशाद्-इत्यलंकारान्तरमेवोत्तरं साधीयः।

7. S. K. III v. 52. Probably Kalpalatā has a different reading.
8. S. K. III. 23.
9. Hemacandra includes Sāra in Parisaṅkhyā [vide his Viveka (p. 395)].

(44) Aasaṅgati (p. 285,l. 17): Not quite traceable. Bhoja includes it under Virodha[1].

(45) Samādhi (p. 285, l. 17): Bhoja gives a figure of sense (arthālaṅkāra) named Samāhita[2], which is Samādhi of Mammaṭa[3]. Bhoja gives another figure called Samādhi or Samādhyukti which is an Ubhayālaṅkāra[4], but is quite different from Mammaṭa's Samādhi. Kalpalatā probably followed Hemacandra[5] and accepted neither of these. The distinction between Samādhyukti[6] and Samāsokti[7] is pointed out.

(p. 285, l. 24) The verse[8] under discussion is the ill. of Melita[9] which is not distinct from Samādhi or Samādhyukti.

[1] S. K, III. 24.

[2] Bhāmaha (B. K. L. III. 10.) and Daṇḍī (K. D. II. 298.) also call it Samāhita. Udbhata's Samāhita is different from the figure of that name given by Bhāmaha and others. Udbhaṭa's Samāhita is very near the Vyājaokti of Mammaṭa (K. P, X 118 cd) and Samādhi vākyārthaguṇa of Bhoja (S. K. I, 84 6), and is based on भावशान्ति (cf माणिक्य's संकेत— p. 39)

[3] K. P. (p. 554) The ill. given by Mammaṭa is borrowed from Daṇḍī.

[4] S. K. IV. 44, (cf Daṇḍī's definition of Samādhi guṇa—K. D. I. 93.)

[5] Hemacandra does not accept Mammaṭa's Samādhi as an independent figure, but includes it in Sammuccaya [vide his Viveka (p. 393)].

[6] This figure is accept by Bhoja (S. K. IV. 41-45). It Is the same as Daṇḍī's Samādhi guṇa, which latter is not accepted by Mammaṭa and Hemacandra, (cf. Bhoja's Samādhi Śabdaguṇa (S. K. I. 72 cd,, where Bhoja follows Daṇḍī.)

[9] This not the Mīlitam of Rudraṭa and Mammaṭa as is supposed by the editors of the S. K. (Nirnaya Sagar 2nd. Ed.) आधारपुस्तकद्वये टीकापुस्तके च मेलितमिति पाठः समुपलभ्यते। परं काव्यप्रकाशादिषु तथा सरस्वतीकण्ठाभरणात्प्राचीने रुद्रटविरचिते काव्यालंकारेऽपि 'मीलितम्' इत्येव वरीवर्तीति तदनुरोधादत्रापि मीलितं',, 'मिलितं' वा युक्तंप्रतिभाति।
(p. 455-fn-1). This is not correct for the following reasons:
(i) Sṛngāra-Prakāśa also reads मेलितम् (vide Sṛ. Pr.-p. 417.)
(ii) Melita of Bhoja, the same as his Samādhi, is quite different from Mīlita of Rudraṭa and Mammaṭa.
(iii) Bhoja too has, both in S. K. and Sr. Pr., an arthālaṁkāra named Milita which partly agrees with Rudraṭa's and Mammaṭa's figure of that name [vide S. K, III, 41 and Sr. Pr. (pp. 319 and 401)]
(iv) Melita is an ubhayālaṁkāra whereas Milita is an arthālaṁkāra, according to Bhoja.
(v) Even Ratneśvara reads 'Melita'.

(47) Viṣama (p. 285, l. 25) Rudraṭa's Viṣama of his Atiśaya[1] set as well as the seven varieties of this figure belonging to his Vāstava set are discussed[2].

(48) Adhika[3] (49) Pratyanīka[4] (50) Mīlitam[5] and (51) Ekāvalī[6] are not quite traceable. Probably they were not accepted as distinct figures, yet it is difficult to say anything definitely.

(52) Smaraṇa p. 286, l. 1): Bhoja's ill. of this figure is discussed[7].

(52) Bhrāntimān (P. 286, l. 1). The ill. of Bhranty-anadhyavasāya (inconclusive illusion)[8] according to Bhoja is discussed. He includes Bhrāntimān, Bhrānti-mālā, Bhrāntyatiśaya, Bhrānty-anadhyavasāya under Bhrānti[9].

(54) Pratīpa (p. 286, l. 3)[10]: Mammaṭa's definition of the second variety of this figure is under discussion[11]. His third variety of Pratīpa is also discussed[12].

(p. 286, l. 4) Rudraṭa's definition of Pratīpa is discussed[13].

(55) Sāmānya (p. 286, l. 6): Mammaṭa's definition of the figure is under discussion.[14]

At times I have not quoted the original sources, even when traced, for want of space. In the subsection on Rasa-doṣas in the first chapter, the discussion of dhavni etc. in the third and that of Rasavat in the last, which all together cover nearly 111 pages i. e. more than one-third of the text almost every line is traced to its original source. But I have not specifically quoted and shown them in the above survey. In the same way I have refrained from quoting or even mentioning the sources in most of the portions on Upamā, Upamā-doṣas and Rūpaka lest that should increase the bulk of this work. I have for the same season not given the detailed table of the prastāra of metres, though worked out by me. Whenever the source traced is relegated to the foot-note the corresponding portion thereof found as lemma in Viveka is printed in thick black types, but when it is quoted in the text of the introduction itself the sourse is indicated in the foot-note. When an ill. from Saravatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa or Kāvya-prakāśa is traced to its source I have prefixed the letter 'v' to the serial number of the verse traced, e. g. S. K. I. v. 22 or K. P. X. v. 514 etc. But when 'v' is not prefixed, the number indicates the serial number of the Kārikā traced, e, g, S, K, I, 21 or K, P, X, 4.

Contribution and Usefulness :

From the above survey it is clear that this work and its original are fraught with borrowing. Yet this fact by itself does not justify branding it as a brazen plagiarism. It would not merely be unjust and wrong but also uncritical to underrate a work without looking to the sterling merits of original criticism which underlies such borrowings.

Useful borrowing is not a new thing in scientific works.[1] On the contrary that was often necessary, even inevitable, in order to reproducing in exact words the statements of the original work whose views were discussed and criticized. It was even more necessary for the writer of Kalpalatā who tried to evolve a synthesis of varied opinions and views held and advocated by early writers on Sanskrit poetics. We have, therefore, to find out the intrinsic merits of the work before we give any opinion as regards its usefulness or otherwise, which in the present case is more difficult to give in the absence of the original.

The author of Kalpalatā was well-versed in several branches of knowledge like Nyāya, Mīmānsā, Vyākaraṇa etc. His knowledge of

[1] In Vyākaraṇa, Mīmansā, Nyāya, Vedānta, in short in all the śāstras, Bhāṣyakāras and commentators quote the views as Pūrva-pakṣa or even appropriate statements and views verbatim. In alamkāra-śāstra itself Bhāmaha and Daṇḍī borrow from earlier writers; Udbhaṭa appropriates verbatim several definitions of alaṁkāras from Bhāmaha. Bhoja borrows from Bhāmaha, Daṇḍī, Rudraṭa, Ānandavardhana, and others. Even Mammaṭa borrows from Bhāmaha, Rudrata, Ānandavardhana, Abhinavagupta, and Mahima Bhatta. Hemacandra borrows from most of his predecessors. Maṇākyacandra borrows many a times from Hemacandra. Viśvanātha, Vidyānātha, Appayya Diksita and even Jagannātha are by no means exceptions to this.

alaṁkāra-Śāstra was undoubtedly very profound. The very fact that he undertook to synthesise and harmonise the divergent opinions on several aspects of the subject suggests not only his deep interest in the subject but also his awareness of the chaotic confusion resulting from this divergence. It also proves his scientific approach to the problem. He seems to have unhesitatingly and confidently criticized the prevailing opinions in a highly constructive manner.

Kalpalatā generally follows Mammaṭa: for example, in the division of doṣas, in the treatment of guṇas and of the twofold alaṁkāras. Though Kalpalatā divides the second chapter into two subsections, it is not possible that it accepted the twofold division of guṇas into śabda guṇas and artha-guṇas. In his treatment of arthālaṁkāras the author shows more originality. He mentions the four sets into which Rudraṭa broadly divides arthālaṁkāras, but treats the latter in the same order in which they are found in Kāvyaprakāśa. All the figures, not accepted by Mammaṭa but treated of in Kalpalatā are given after Vyāghāta, Mammaṭaś last śabdālaṁkāra. Some of the alaṁkāras are not quite traceable, either because they were not accepted or were treated in detail in Pallava and therefore not discussed by Viveka [1].

The author of Kalpalatā does not accept some of the varieties of Upamā given by Daṇḍī e. g, ācikhyāsopamā, nindopamā, śleṣopamā, samccitopamā, etc. He criticises Vāmana's Kalpitopamā. In his treatment of Rūpaka he criticses Bhoja's over fondness for divisions and their meticulous sub-divisions [2].

He criticises Udbhaṭaś view about Śleṣa and follows Mammaṭa. Aprastuta-praśansā and Anyoktī are considered to be identical here as in Hemacandra's Kāvyānuśāsana [3].

Udbhaṭa's ill. of Ākṣepa is called into question. It is suggested that Ākṣepa is also possible when the denial of aprastuta refers to prastuta. Rodha is included in Ākṣepa, as is done by Bhoja. Ahetu of Rudraṭa and Bhoja is included in Viśeṣokti, along with the second type of Kāraṇamālā. Ekāvalī is included in Parikara, as is done by Bhoja.

Āśis, Rasvat, Preyas, Urjasvī and Samāhita, which are not accepted by Mammaṭa and Hemacandra seem to have been accepted by Kalpalatā.

Mammaṭa does not accept Rasavat etc. but includes them in subordinate suggestion (guṇībhuta-vyaṅgya)[4]. While explaining his definition of poetry he indirectly refers to Rasavat as an arthālamkāra with the remarks: atra sphuṭo na kaścid alaṁkāraḥ/ Rasasya hi prādhānyān nālaṁkāratā //[1].

In the fifth ullāsa he mentions them as alaṁkāras according to 'some'.[2] But he neither refutes the advocates of these figures nor categorically denies them a separate status as alaṁkāras, perhaps out of deference for Ānandavardhana.[3]

Kalpalatā accepts these alaṁkāras. It also treats of six Pramāṇas of Jaimini as arthālaṁkāras as Bhoja does, and thus differs from Mammaṭa and Hemacandra.[4]

The author of Viveka shows comprehensive grasp, clear understanding and critical acumen in his exposition. Though he follows Namisādhu at times even when the latter's interpretation of Rudraṭa is not convincing, yet on the whole his interpretations are lucid and scholarly.

In the third chaper of Viveka there are two points which attract our notice. The first is the wholesale borrowing of almost the first three chapters of Dhvanyāloka along with Locana thereon. The second is the detailed calculations of the prastāra of metres. In this, the author of Viveka evinces his deep love for and careful study of mathematics. He has given exact and perhaps tediously meticulous details of the numerous calculations. He also gives the methods he used for working out these calculations. Naturally the theories are not his own. He quotes a Prākṛt verse attributing it to Parameśvara.[5]

Viveka offers lucid explanations, critical discussions aad interpretations of many a difficult portions from several works on Poetics like Bhamahaś Kāvyālaṁkāra, Rudraṭaś Kāvyālaṁkāra, Locana and Abhinavabhārati of Abhinavagupta, Vāmanaś Kvāyālaṁkāṛa-ṣūtra, Kāvyapraksa etc. This is enough to make Viveka an important work.

The other important feature of Viveka is that it offers very happpy readings of works like Abhinava-bhārati, Locana etc. whose clear and correct texts are still things to be wished for. This work, therefore, may be used as a testimonium of highly corroborative value along with Hemacandra's Kāvyānuśāsana, while editing corrupt portions of such works. Viveka contains useful and meaningful variants for Bhāmahas Kāvyālemkāra which has in some places remained still incomprehensible due to defective and scanty manuscript material, inspite of the very learned, painstaking and excellent commentary in lucid Sanskrit by Prof. Tatacharya.

[5] I have not been able to place this Parameśvara, He cannot be the one who flourished in the 13th century A. D, Thus Viveka is very useful inspite of its borrowings and inspite of the fact that the original is yet to be found.

In the foregoing pages attempt is made to trace the authorship, to give a topic-wise survey of the text, to trace the sources and to point out the usefulness of this work. I am extremely sorry for the misprints that have crept into this introduction through my inexperience and even inadvertence. I crave the indulgence of the learned for whatever defects and mistakes they meet with in this introduction. I say with Māṇikyacandra,

"अदृष्टदोषात्स्मृतिविभ्रमाच्च यदर्थहीनं लिखितं मयाऽत्र। तत्सर्वमार्यैःपरिशोधनीयं प्रायेण मुह्यन्ति हि ये लिखन्ति ॥"

It would be ungrateful of me not to express my deep sense of gratitude to the renowned scholars, like Prof. R. C. Parikh, Dr. V. Raghavan, Prof. D. T. Tatacharya, Prof. F. Th. Stcherbatsky and many others whose works have been of immense use to me.

I also thank Pandit Dalsukhbhai Malvania for entrusting me with the work of writing this introduction and also for the numerous suggestions he has so graciously and unassumingly offered and, what is more, for the amiable patience with which he has borne with the delay in the execution of this rather arduous task, which resulted from unforeseen circumstances many of which were not within my control. I also thank my friend Dr. Naginbhai Shah and Pandit Abmbalal Shah for the inspiration and encouragement they spontaneously and selflessly gave me.
